Helping your Child Succeed!

with Early Intervention

Hi, My name is Zevi!

Zevi starts at a local playgroup. Doesn't know how to interact with other children and just stands to the side. He can't join in. His motor skills are all behind. Is assessed on the NHS & diagnosed with Autistic Spectrum

2 Yrs Old

What a different child Zevi is. His speech is still about 6 months behind his peers but he is talking. He makes eye contact. He joins in at Playgroup. He has no more tantrums & no banging his head. He is even Toilet Trained.

18 Months

Zevi is not making any eye contact, has no verbal communication or understanding. Looking for sensory output by banging his head on hard surfaces. Is having 20 tantrums a day from being frustrated.

3 Months Later

Zevi starts 4hrs therapy a week at The Elijah Centre.

The team do not agree with the NHS diagnosis. Zevi learns to talk & understand simple language.

3 Yrs Old

3.5 Yrs Old

Zevi starts Kindergarten in a mainstream from school. He is so sociable & has tons of friends. His language is a little behind so he still goes for 4hrs therapy a week. He is such a happy boy. His sensory issues are a thing of the past. He has overcome the majority of his challenges.

4.5 Yrs Old

Zevi is a total chatterbox. He is confident and loves to shout out all the answers in class. He has so many friends and loves going to school.

The Elijah Centre is here to help your child with a range of issues including:

- ✓ Autism Spectrum Disorder
- ✓ ADD / ADHD
- ✓ Speech Delay
- ✓ Developmental Delays
- ✓ Learning Difficulties
- ✓ Social Difficulties

ARI AND DANIEL RICHMAN

The MOVEMENT

by Ruthie Pearlman

Prologue

The young woman lay back in the chair, listening to the calming yet insistent voice. She was aware of the muted décor in the room, the beige tones of the furniture and wallpaper, the soothing colours of the curtains kept three quarters drawn so the sunlight would not disturb her.

She felt totally relaxed, as if she was floating. The voice droned on.

"You are twelve years old again, Miriam. It is supertime at home. How do you feel?"
Miriam floated back in time. She saw herself at the dinner table.

"Hungry. I am talking to my mother as I eat. I have a plate full of food; chicken, potatoes, vegetables. I don't feel sick. I have no urge to run to the bathroom and make myself throw up. I am enjoying this meal and talking to my mother."

"That is good, Miriam. That is very good. We are making progress. Can you look at yourself at age twelve? Do you see yourself?"

"Yes."

"What do you see?"

"A normal body, not fat, not thin."

"Good, excellent. Now I want to take you forward to two months ago, when you had just turned eighteen..."

Miriam nodded and floated. The voice receded until it was a hum in her head, like a fly buzzing. She could hear what the voice was saying but it wasn't making much sense.

Then she stiffened and began to scream.

The confession

CHAPTER ONE

WPC Wendy Richards walked into Colin's office looking anxious. There's a woman at the front desk, sir," she said "and she seems a bit..unbalanced."

Colin and Peter had been sitting and having coffee, doing paperwork and chewing over some cases. They had piles of forms in front of them and expense sheets to fill out. It was one of the least fulfilling but most necessary part of police work, and they both hated it.

Life in Golders Green had been quiet for almost two years. After the excitement generated by the Hardman kidnapping, with its attendant media interest centred on the quiet suburb, it was as if the neighbourhood only had negative energy, like a black hole. Whereas before Detective Inspector Colin Sommers had been perfectly happy with a few smash-and-grabs and breaking-and-enterings, now it all seemed incredibly pallid and boring. Not that he was complaining, really. If excitement meant kidnappings and murder, he could handle ennui.

"Drunk and disorderly is she?" Peter said in a bored fashion. He had had enough of these millennium revellers. There was a small pocket of radicals who insisted the millennium began in January 2001. Hadn't they had enough fuss the year before with the millennium celebrations and worries about the bug that turned out to be no more than a damp squib? Did they really have to start all over again this year? The closer it got to New Year, the more they drank and the more unruly they became. He planned to have a drink or two himself to welcome in the New Year but hey, it wasn't here yet, not for another two weeks or so.

Colin, on the other hand, had never gotten the hang of getting totally out of his skull drunk all the time he was living like a non-Jew. Otherwise he made quite a passable gentile, thought Peter indulgently. He had been shocked when Colin had confessed to being Jewish. And he was even more bemused now, seeing how religious he had become. Although, now that Colin was engaged, it all made a whole lot more sense.

"She doesn't seem drunk," Richards said doubtfully, "more like hysterical. Shall I show her in?"

"Can't you deal with her, Richards?" Colin asked irritably. "I've got these crime figures to do and all these expense forms to sort through."

"She said she thinks she's killed someone, sir," said Richards.

"So can't you deal with it, woman? What do I employ you for other than to take care of routine...she what?!"

"She said she thinks she killed someone, sir," Richards couldn't help the ghost of

"Well, what are you messing about for? Show her in!"

The young woman, no more than a girl, really, who fearfully entered Colin's office a moment later, reminded him of a frightened doe. She was painfully thin; even the bulky clothes she wore couldn't conceal her condition. Stringy, shoulder length dark hair and overlong bangs framed a gaunt, pale face out of which huge dark eyes peered like an animal in the forest. A small pinched mouth trembled, and skeletal hands clutched a wad of damp tissues that she kept applying to a small red nose.

Colin, the hardened policeman, felt a rush of sympathy for this terrified creature; the way one might feel sorry for a bird expelled from the nest and unable to fly. Peter, always the gentleman, leaped to his feet and pulled out a chair. "Here, sit down miss. Would you like a cup of tea?" The young woman sat and huddled into her chair as if to hide there. She continued to clutch the pile of tissues and shook her head at the offer.

"I can't stand it anymore," she cried out, "I've tried talking myself out of the idea. It's just too monstrous to contemplate that I'm capable of doing such a thing, but it keeps jumping up and biting me. I have to tell someone! I have to!"
