"It's not about supporting a yeshiva. כלל ישראל will determine the vitality of the yeshiva. If the campaign is successful, the yeshiva continues, and if not, the doors will have to close."

הרה"ג חיים מרדכי אוזבנדר שליט"א

הרה"ג רב בן ציון הכהן קוק שליט"א

"The biggest chinuch in kavod hatorah that we can give over to our children will be, if we get together and tell Rav Shlomo to go back to his talmidim and well take care of him"

WHAT DO YOU SAY CHAIM?
ISN'T THAT A GOOD EXAMPLE OF USING YOUR BRAIN?

I THINK IT'S A VERY GOOD EXAMPLE OF THE YETZER HARAH USING

THIS IS A CLASSICAL
CASE OF AVEIRA
GORERES AVEIRA!

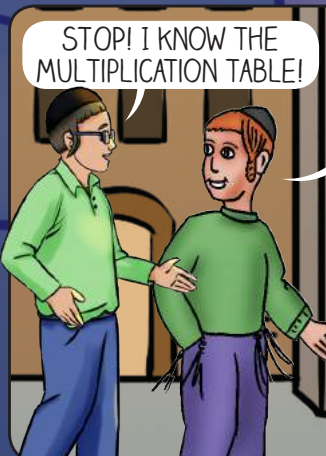

WHY?

WHY? FIRST
YOU'RE LYING ABOUT THE WINDOW.
[NEVER MIND THE FACT THAT

NOW YOU ARE GOING TO LIE TO YOUR MOTHER THAT YOU
ARE NOT FEELING WELL, AND PROBABLY ANOTHER LIE TO REBBE ABOUT WHY
YOU CAME LATE!

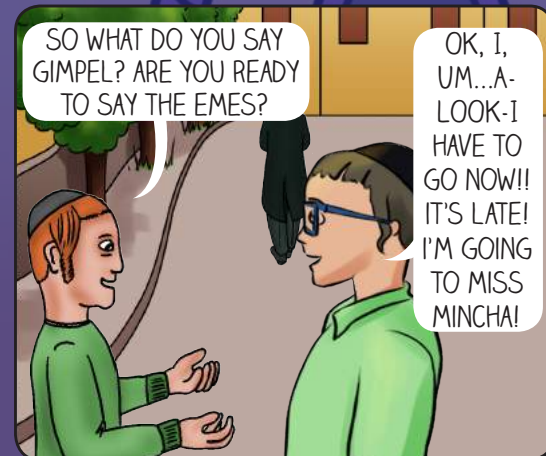

DON'T YOU SEE
WHAT'S HAPPENING?
JUST ADMIT! LOOK WHAT YOU'RE DOING GIMPEL!
ONE MISTAKE
BECOMES 3 LIES,
AND THEN YOU'LL PROBABLY NEED ANOTHER 6 LIES TO COVER UP FOR THE
FIRST 3, AND THAN ANOTHER 12....

STOP! I KNOW THE MULTIPLICATION TABLE!

LISTEN TO ME- A
YID IS CALLED YEHUDA BECAUSE YEHUDA ADMITTED.
THERE IS NOTHING WRONG WITH ADMITTING-AND THEN YOU AVOID ALL OF THESE OTHER TROUBLES

TO FOLLOW IF YOU
TRY TO LIE!

SO WHAT DO YOU SAY
GIMPEL? ARE YOU READY TO SAY THE EMES?

DARK TAPESTRY

by Ruthie Pearlman

CHAPTER SIXTEEN

Friday. Was it really only six days since the morning Ilana had gone into Josh's bedroom to wake him for school and found him missing? Shabbos was coming. Shabbos, with its promises of rest and tranquility. Shabbos, which had been described as one-sixtieth of the World to Come; one could glimpse the wonders if one experienced Shabbos in the right spirit. What kind of Shabbos would Josh be experiencing?

I just hope he is alive to experience it at all, Ilana thought as she wearily got herself out of bed and readied herself to begin preparations. She had a guest, too — the illustrious Miss Jakober, who, even now at this early hour, she could hear moving about in the guest bedroom. No thoughts of sleeping in, then. This young woman was motivated and eager to make a start. That gave Ilana hope. Something positive to hold on to. Ilana was glad Leora was staying in the house. She could really keep on top of events with the criminologist under her roof.

In Baruch Weiss's house a few streets away, Baruch, Malka, and the children were all up. Baruch had taken the kids to shul and was back having breakfast. There was the usual panic about lost schoolbags and recriminations against Malka for having run out of the kids' favorite carton drinks, all of which Malka bore with the stoic patience of one long used to such behavior. "No Five Alive? Fine, so take Ribena for today. I'll try and get Five Alive later if I have time before Shabbos.

"Your schoolbag is where you dumped it last night: on the chair in the living room. Maybe if you put it where it is supposed to be put, you wouldn't lose it.

"You didn't do your maths homework? Your problem. No, I won't write you a note claiming we were too busy trying to find Josh Hardman. That excuse does not wash with me, and it certainly won't wash with your teachers. You are not looking for Josh Hardman; only Daddy is. Now go to school and suffer the consequences or do your maths homework now. You still have ten minutes before you have to leave.

"No, I will not open a new packet of Frosted Flakes until you have finished the old one. I don't particularly care if you get a few crumbs in your bowl, that's life. Someone has to get the crumbs at the bottom of the packet."

Eventually, with an expressive banging of the front door meant to be indicative of her small son's disgust with his mother's parenting skills, Baruch and Malka were alone. Sighing, Malka made herself a strong cup of tea and joined Baruch at the breakfast table. She reached for the unopened box of cereal and noticed her husband's raised eyebrows.

"Hey, I don't like the crumbs either," she said, grinning at her husband. "I like opening the new packet of cereal!" Baruch grinned back. "You're a cruel mother, Malka Weiss. Can I have the free gift?"

The couple ate companionably for a few minutes until Malka broke the silence.

"Do you have any idea what time Avi Pincus got in?"

"No, I was asleep. But he did phone at four-twenty-something to say he had found a way of tracing the Fox. After that I put the door on the digital so he could get in and went back to sleep."

"Digital? You mean you didn't give the poor man a key before he went? What would have happened if he had come back without phoning first?"

Baruch looked suitably ashamed. "I suppose he would have rung the bell and woken me."

"Well, I did hear him come back in, as a matter of fact. Yossi was crying, and I went to make him a bottle, so I was up."

Once again, Baruch marveled at the maternal instinct. A mother could sleep through a medium-size earthquake but would wake like a shot as soon as a baby whimpered in another room.

"So what time was it, then?"

"Six-fifteen. I heard the lock being coded while I was downstairs making the bottle. Avi stumbled into the kitchen and asked for a cup of hot chocolate. I had the kettle on for the bottle, so I made it quickly. When I asked him if he wanted anything to eat, he said, 'You gotta be kidding. I need sleep,' and stumbled upstairs with the cup of chocolate. And that was that."

"You didn't even ask him what he had found out!" Baruch exclaimed.

Malka stared at him. "The guy was literally falling over from exhaustion. He had flown in from Israel yesterday, which you know is exhausting, and he had barely eaten and hadn't slept a wink the whole night working on the Hardman case, and you expect me to quiz him on his findings?"

"Heaven knows how long he'll sleep.

Another whole day wasted, and then it's Shabbos," grumbled Baruch, unwilling to back down.

"Don't be ridiculous. Avi will sleep as long as he needs to, and anyway, he isn't the only person on the case. From what I hear on the grapevine, the Hardmans have a very interesting house guest at the moment."

"Yeah? Who?"

"A lady criminologist from New York. Leora Jakober. From what I hear, she's religious. Can you imagine?"

"A frum lady criminologist? Never heard of such a thing."

"Well, I have Shabbos to prepare," Malka said, making it perfectly obvious that her husband was underfoot.

"And I have work to do," Baruch said importantly, and they parted company for the day, despite the prickly top layer of conversation, deeply contented with each other.

Ilana welcomed her guest for breakfast. Don had left early for the office since he came home early on Fridays. Ilana was putting the finishing touches to the cholent in the Crock-Pot, which would now simmer away until Shabbos lunch. "That cholent smells good!" Leora exclaimed, coming over and taking an unladylike sniff at the fragrant steam. "You're a good cook. Scrambled eggs on toast is about my limit. My parents never cooked."
