Uprooted in France Planted in California

After searching through dozens of clones, soils and planting locations, the Herzog family selected the Musqué Clone for their Lineage series. Originating in Bordeaux, France 1962—this uniquely aromatic Sauvignon Blanc is perfectly matched with the rugged soil, clean air and warm climate of Lake County, California. In bringing them together, the family has crafted an elegant Sauvignon Blanc that captures every nuance of the Musqué Clone.

Product of USA

august 2018 / the tasting panel

Herzog Lineage 2017 Sauvignon Blanc, Lake County made from the Musqué clone, has a nose that reminded us of pineapple upside-down cake. Lemon curd aromas meld with grassy notes while vanilla pudding adds a creamy texture to the mid-palate. This unique creature finishes with honeyed apricot.

DARK TAPESTRY

by Ruthie Pearlman

Chapter Nine

Colin arrived back at the station to find Don and Ilana waiting for him. Ilana was sobbing uncontrollably, and Colin's heart went out to her. Fearing the worst, Colin wordlessly took the printout Don was clutching and scanned it quickly.

You call me misbeliever, cutthroat dog
And spit upon my Jewish gaberdine.
Revenge is a dish best eaten cold,
Says the Internet Fox.

"A poet yet," Colin said grimly.

"I didn't want to call. I didn't want to come here!" Ilana wailed. "I'd rather take a chance and have my son back safely than risk him knowing I've contacted you."

Don and Colin locked eyes for an instant.

"I know how she feels, but you've done the right thing," Colin said. "We'll sit down together and think about this e-mail. It may contain clues." He signaled to a woman police constable. He needed to ask Don some questions, and Ilana's distress was distracting.

"Come along and have a nice cuppa." The kindly WPC took Ilana away. "I'll give it to you in a polystyrene cup. I've sent someone out for some kosher milk. There's a shop just up the road." Ilana allowed herself to be led off.

"I don't think she's much use right now, to be honest," Colin explained to Don. "Needs to calm down."

Don nodded his agreement. "She's been spaced out on and off ever since it happened, sometimes alert and lucid and at others totally out of it. This second e-mail seems to have tipped her over the edge. She's done nothing but sob since it arrived."

"Do you think she'll calm down enough to think about who might have sent this e-mail?" Colin asked.

"I don't know. At the moment, my wife is not herself. But the wife I do know is strong and resourceful. She'll conquer her hysteria if she knows it will help find Josh."

"Is anyone staying with you to see her through this? Her mother or a friend?"

"Frankly, we don't want it. We find it an intrusion. They don't know what to say to us, apart from silly platitudes we find irritating. We end up having to entertain them or keep reassuring them that we aren't falling apart. To be honest with you, Detective Inspector, the only sort of people who would be tolerable in our home right now are people like yourself. People who are getting on with finding where my son is. Anyone else is a nuisance. Sorry if I sound ungrateful, but we have to cope the best way we know how, and we have no resources left to either entertain or reassure. We just support each other."

Colin nodded his understanding. He led Don into a small and cluttered office. Sweeping a pile of papers onto a small side table and clearing some space in his desk, he said, "Bachelor habits."

Don shrugged a "doesn't bother me" gesture and they sat. "Do you go into work?" he asked Don.

"Yes. I have to. It would do Ilana good to come in, too. I'm trying to persuade her. Rattling around alone in that big house with no one but Maria for company is driving her nuts. She needs the distraction of work and company. But she's constantly worried that she might miss a vital phone call or e-mail."

"Surely you can arrange to have your home calls diverted to your office during the day?"

"Of course we can. But she's lost all trust in the system. The system which allowed her precious baby to be abducted might let her down if she isn't there to constantly monitor the phone, fax, and e-mail, too. That's how she's thinking at the moment, but it's early days and I'm hoping I can persuade her to come into work soon, even for a few hours a day. Maria loved that boy almost as much as we and would guard the phone and computer like a centurion."

"It would help her if she could be persuaded to carry on as normal a life as possible," Colin said gently.

Don nodded. "I'll try my best. Now, about this e-mail."

"Yes. The e-mail. Let's take another look at it." Colin spread the printout on his desk. "Hm. Let me make a copy of this. It will be easier."

Once they each had a copy, they sat and studied it for a while.

"Well," Don began, "sounds like someone with a problem about being Jewish. Accusing us of antisemitism, for heaven's sake."

"Bit weird, isn't it?"

"Definitely weird."

They looked at it again.

"The last bit. The bit about revenge being a 'dish best eaten cold.' This is the clue to the motive."

"Revenge? Not money, then?"

"It certainly isn't following any of the normal patterns of kidnaping for ransom, no. There has been no ransom demand, and there nearly always is one by this stage. Anyway, if they wanted to kidnap for money, with all due respect to your good selves, you wouldn't have been the target. I've seen the way you live, and unless you are a miserly billionaire, you are not the typical target of a kidnapper for ransom."

Don managed a smile. "You're right. We don't have that much money. We get by, but there are many more wealthy families in Golders Green."

"Not only wealthy, Mr. Hardman, but overtly wealthy. Stupidly so, if you ask me."

Don said, "But who would want to take revenge on us? What have we done? I don't understand."

"That's for you to tell me, Mr. Hardman."

"Nothing as far as I know. I don't think I've made any enemies." Don sat, thinking, a puzzled frown creasing his forehead.

"Usually it's the rich ones who make the enemies," agreed Colin. "Jealousy, resentment, you name it, the rich come in for it. But in your case...?"

"I'm not rich. No one is jealous of me. I only have one son. Most people around here have large families, so they're certainly not jealous of me for that."

"What about in your work? A disgruntled ex-employee?"

"Hm. I thought I had a very good relationship with my employees."

"Have all your present employees been with you for some time?"

"You asked me this once before."

"So humor me. Tell me again. I need to get a clearer picture."

"We are four partners. We built the business up from scratch. My partners are all Jewish, all Orthodox, and I trust them implicitly."

Colin nodded his understanding at this.

"My wife is a kind of sub-partner. There are five guys on tech support. Shift workers, eight hours at a time, round the clock. We get phone calls at all times of the day and night. The two secretaries are middle-aged. They've been with us for years. One is due to retire soon. Neither of them knows a thing about computers except how to save and print. They're always calling in the tech support guys to help them if they get a problem with the word processor. The older of the two likes to type on an electric typewriter rather than a computer. Neither of them use the Internet; they wouldn't have the faintest idea how. They type letters and reports. That's it."

"Isn't that a bit of a disadvantage for you, being an Internet company?" Colin asked, mildly amused by this account of the two secretaries.
