Lifepoint Healthcare
Independent Health Insurance Specialists

Client Testimonial

"My experience with Lifepoint Healthcare was out of this world. For quite a few years I have been trying to lower my healthcare premiums.

Whatever I tried didn't work. If I did get a cheaper policy, there were always technical stipulations or there would be exclusions etc.

I turned to Lifepoint & somehow they negotiated with my present provider a deal that landed me paying almost half of what I was paying.

It was mind-blowing.

Exactly the same policy but half the price.

I am so grateful & happy."

DARK TAPESTRY

by Ruthie Pearlman

Chapter Fourteen

"Oh?" she said seriously.

"We're investigating the disappearance and probable abduction of eight-year-old Josh Hardman from his parents' home in Golders Green earlier this week."

"Abduction? How terrible! But how do I come into this exactly?" Her clear green eyes showed concern.

"We have had information to the effect that a Miss Cindy Wallis lives here," Peter said pompously.

"Cindy worked for a brief time for the Hardmans as a temp while their secretary was ill. We wondered if you knew her."

"Of course I know Cindy. I'm her landlady. Or used to be."

"Doesn't she live here now?"

"Well, she does and she doesn't. She occasionally comes back. Bit of a drifter. But she pays her rent, so I keep her room available. She hasn't been here now for several weeks."

"Does she leave her things in her room when she isn't here?"

"Some bits and pieces, yes. Do you want to see?"

"Yes, we would, madam."

She hesitated. "I don't know. They're not mine. Don't you need some kind of authorization?"

"We could get a search warrant. It would take a bit of time, but we'd get it. It's up to you."

"Well, I suppose it's all right. There's nothing much anyway, and I can always tell her you coerced me into it." A sly smile.

"Might as well finish our drinks, eh, Colin?" Peter said with a contented sigh.

A blue-colored bird swooped down from a nearby tree and hopped across the perfect lawn. "Looks like someone's budgie has escaped," remarked Colin dreamily, sipping his drink. He was aware that he had a missing child and an abductor to catch, but this was a moment to be savored. Just a moment.

"Oh, that's Georgie. He's mine. I let him out for a fly about every day. He always comes back." Karen gestured lazily to a cage with an open door sitting in a corner of the patio.

"You'll be sorry if one day he doesn't," Peter said.

"Georgie likes his home comforts far too much to fly away and not come back," Karen said.

"I wasn't thinking of it being exactly voluntary," Peter said, pointing to a rather large ginger tomcat who had suddenly appeared on the neighbor's fence.

"Marmalade wouldn't hurt my Georgie, would you, Marmalade?" cooed Karen Whitestone. In reply the cat yawned, exhibiting a fine set of far-from-innocent-looking teeth.

"Just the right size for a snack or small lunch," murmured Peter half to himself, eyeing the budgerigar.

"Cindy loves Georgie," Karen commented, ignoring the cat comments. "She's always playing with him and teaching him to talk when she's home."

"Does she come home on a regular basis or just any old time?" Colin asked, finishing his drink.

"As I said, she hasn't been home now for several weeks. But that doesn't mean I can expect her any minute. It doesn't work like that with Cindy. She's her own boss and does as she pleases. Bit of an independent missie, she is."

"Okay, let's see her room."

The small room was uncluttered. There were few possessions in it of any interest. The two men looked through the clothes and pockets. Cindy had a garish dress sense, veering toward the short and gaudy. A couple of pairs of high-heeled boots were all the shoes in the wardrobe, probably because of the season. Colin looked through the bedside cabinet. A couple of novels and a box of tissues. He picked up one of the novels. It was a science fiction adventure.

"Looky here, Pete, she's got the very one I'm missing in the series. I've ordered it and ordered it, and they keep telling me it's out of print and they can't get it." He looked up at Karen. "I've been wanting to read this for years. I don't suppose..."

"You can't expect me to give you permission to take that book away." She sniffed disapprovingly. Colin made his mind up. "Sergeant White?"

White stood to mock attention. "Yes, sir?" Colin held out his hand like a surgeon waiting for a scalpel to be slapped into it.

"Evidence bag. Large."

Peter produced a clear plastic bag with a Ziploc top and slapped it into Colin's hand. Straight-faced, Colin picked up the novel with a tissue and dropped it into the plastic bag.

"Essential evidence," he said to Karen. "Here's my card. If Cindy should get in touch, or if you think of anything which might help, please phone at once."

Leaving her openmouthed, the two policemen walked out of the house. In the car, Peter said to Colin, "Well, watcha reckon?"

Colin grinned. "I reckon I've got the missing book in the series. Can't wait to read it tonight."

Avi found the address for SmallNet Ltd. It was situated on a small industrial estate in the western fringes of London. He could have told which it was without looking up the exact address. Its concrete block, looking like a matchbox lying down, was positively bristling with cables, antennae, and wiring. The other identical concrete blocks on the estate seemed to be mainly manufacturing outfits or warehouses. Avi parked the car and strolled into the building. There was no reception area. The whole outfit seemed to be in the one horizontal matchbox room, mostly taken up by two banks of monitors and several PCs at which sat a few bored-looking technicians playing games. The modems flashed red and green. No phones rang. The room was silent.

"Er, who is the boss here?" Avi called.

A tall man stood up from behind a computer. "You're talking to him. I'm Renard Lukavac. Who are you?"

"Hey." Avi came forward with an outstretched hand. "I'm the guy you've been looking for."

"You are? I didn't know I was looking for anyone."

"The guy who will sort out all your technical problems, the guy who will get your networks and firewalls working just so. You are looking at the answer to your prayers!"

Renard Lukavac came forward and peered at Avi as if he were an interesting specimen under a microscope. "Hm. Well, it just so happens that I could do with a good network and Internet man. Just seems funny that, to paraphrase a famous saying, out of all the Internet providers in all the towns, you had to drift into mine."

"You run yourself down, Renard!" Avi said with a broad smile. "Why would I want to work for a large, impersonal provider when I could work in this lovely, cozy office with all you friendly people?"

Lukavac, chewing on a cigarette, seemed unconvinced. "Got a CV?"

Avi produced one out of his inner pocket. He'd brought it with him from Israel, hoping for just such a situation. Lukavac studied it for a while.

"Impressive working history. Well. I could give you a trial run. Pay isn't brilliant. We're small and can't afford much. Can you do the night shift? We're short-staffed at night."

"That's perfect," said Avi. "I just love working nights, and I love working on networks. It's quiet then and my needs are simple. Can I start right away?"
