Lifepoint Healthcare
Independent Health Insurance Specialists

Client Testimonial

"My experience with Lifepoint Healthcare was out of this world. For quite a few years I have been trying to lower my healthcare premiums.

Whatever I tried didn't work. If I did get a cheaper policy, there were always technical stipulations or there would be exclusions etc.

I turned to Lifepoint & somehow they negotiated with my present provider a deal that landed me paying almost half of what I was paying.

It was mind-blowing.

Exactly the same policy but half the price.

I am so grateful & happy."

Back to School!

ARE THEY?

Is your child struggling socially or failing academically in school? Don't just plaster the issues, treat it at its core.

- ADD/ADHD.
- Focus.
- Reading.
- Visual Memory.
- Spatial Awareness.
- Disorganization.
- Coordination.

Neurosteps Physio-Neuro Therapy is a comprehensive one-to-one program that combines mental and physical exercises to strengthen the ways your child's brain is processing the world around them. Neurosteps goes past the makeshift solutions to cure the underlying cause of your child's academic and social issues.

Male & Female instructors available.

Tova Mordechai

At the age of sixteen, Tonica Marlow, daughter of a Protestant minister father and an Egyptian Jewish mother, was accepted as the youngest student at a noted Christian theological college.

Within four years, she had become an ordained minister. Yet, with all her success within the church, she could not explain the deep void she felt inside. She asked questions, but the answers she received did not satisfy her. And so began a remarkable quest for her heritage.

Tonica Marlow is now Tova Mordechai. She resides in Israel with her husband and family. She has authored an autobiography, teaches in two schools and lectures worldwide.

Her fascinating story will touch your heart and inspire you.

DARK TAPESTRY

by Ruthie Pearlman

“Well, that episode certainly taught the partners the value of us older secretaries,” said another voice. A smiling, gray-haired lady entered the room with a tray of mugs. “Tea’s up. I’m Alicia Morgan by the way. How do you do, Detective Inspector?”

Alicia Morgan was a tall, slender reed of a woman, supremely elegant, with perfectly coiffed hair and manicured nails. A total contrast to Mary Nolan, who was everyone’s favorite granny, no one could imagine Alicia ever wanting to deal with grandchildren. She was like a duchess, and Mary was like the downstairs maid. She served tea and coffee to everyone like it was being served in the finest china cups instead of chipped and ill-assorted mugs, asking if anyone wanted milk and sugar with the most elegant of manners.

“Thank you,” Colin said, sipping from his pottery mug and wondering if he ought to extend his little finger in the manner of well-bred English gentlemen.

“How long have you been working here? As long as Mary?” Sergeant White asked.

“No, no,” Alicia Morgan hastened to point out. “I am not as old as Mary Nolan.” She smiled sweetly.

Don and Ilana had a sudden fit of coughing, and Mary looked miffed.

“I’ve been here four and a half years, actually,” Alicia added. “I’m a very experienced shorthand typist. I trained in the top girls’ college in London.” (She pronounced it “gels.”) “I also have a good telephone manner so Mr. Hardman likes me to be the first to respond.”

“And computers? Are you familiar with them?”

“Well, they weren’t around when I went to college. But Mr. Hardman taught me the basics, how to type and how to save and print. What else does one need? And anyway, we have technical support on tap if things go wrong. As they frequently do, unfortunately.” A well-timed sniff showed her real feelings about computers.

It was clear to Colin that these two secretaries had both a common bond and a divisive streak that forged them together as a unit and divided in mutual but mostly good-natured sniping. Both secretaries exhibited a maternal affection for the Hardmans and expressed their deep concern for Josh’s safety.

“I hope you find the wee laddie safe and sound,” Mary said, traces of her Scottish ancestry peeping out.

“Indeed, yes. We were all terribly fond of him. When he used to come to the office in his holiday times to ‘help,’ he was so sweet...”

There was an awkward silence at Alicia’s use of the past tense. She coughed.

“He really is a delightful little boy,” Alicia said with emphasis into the silence. Everyone shuffled around a little, then relaxed, as if talking about the boy in the present tense made it so.

“Sorry,” Alicia said.

Imperceptible nodding of heads showed that forgiveness was granted.

Colin went on to interview the other partners. They were three Orthodox men in their thirties who spoke supportively of the Hardmans.

All of them had small Gemaras or Mishnahs on their desks for study during the quiet times, when they weren’t busy working on Web sites. Colin looked at them and remembered a time when he, too, would gain spiritual pleasure from the study of the Talmud and its commentaries. He remembered learning with his chavrusa regularly, arguing heatedly and discussing the finer points of some gemara. He recalled the buzz, the intensity of it, and could not, at this moment, recall anything that came close to that feeling. Sighing, he turned his attention to the matter at hand.

QUALITY VACATION DOESN'T HAVE TO BE EXPENSIVE

The partners were close friends of Don, and none, as far as he could see, had any ax to grind. They all seemed genuinely distressed at Josh's disappearance, and Colin reckoned he'd have an almost impossible task to prove they were being hypocritical. However, he'd been a cop too long to take things at face value, so he made a point of taking all their names and addresses to check them out later.

Then came the technical staff who were on duty at that time. Harry and Ewan seemed loyal and committed to the business. They both vaguely recalled the "flibbertigibbet."

"Name was Cindy, I think," said Harry. "A whiz on the keyboard. Surprised us all, to be honest. Looked as if she had nothing but air between her ears, but she could find her way around a computer."

"Sounds like she should have been useful, then."

"Should have been, but wasn't. Too young, too lazy, too interested in playing rather than working."

"So she was sacked?" Colin asked.

"Yup. Given her marching orders. Didn't like it, of course. She thought she had a meal ticket, free access to the Net to chat to her friends, only do a bit of work when the bosses were looking over her shoulder, keeping the chat rooms hidden behind a work screen. Only the bosses knew the work they had given her wasn't getting done in a reasonable time frame and started looking harder at her screen, did a few Alt-Tabs to bring up what was hidden..."

"I suppose she could have gotten another similar job fast enough?" White said.

"Maybe, but she'd have had to forge references, 'cause we certainly didn't supply any."

The rest of the staff didn't have much more to add. The two policemen left Ilana and Don in their workplace and went back to their car. Sitting inside it, windows rolled down to let in the warm spring sunshine, Colin said, "Disgruntled employee?"

"The flibbertigibbet is the Internet Fox? Do you really think so? Bit hard to imagine it being a girl, but then again, we do tend to typecast villains, don't we?"

"Playing on-line games and chatting on IRC doesn't add up to the skills the Fox possesses," Colin said. "It adds up to a pretty good computer know-how, agreed, but, Peter, the Fox knows how to do things that even propeller heads we have consulted don't know. This person has to be a seriously good hacker."

"Hacker? How so?"

"Before we came in this morning I had a phone call from that annoying pest of a man who keeps driving me mad about doing the search."

"Mr. Baruch Weiss," said Peter with a smile, pronouncing the Baruch as "Baruk."

"That's the one. I usually tell Potter to tell him I'm out. But this time he was most insistent that I come to the phone. Apparently he and his little group of expert searchers for lost children had sent an e-mail to someone in Israel who they reckon can find out who this Internet Fox is."

"Get to the point, man," Peter said.

"The point is, White, that the reply came, but it wasn't from their friend. It had been intercepted en route."

"Intercepted? How? It's not like grabbing a letter from a postbox and replacing it with a different one, surely. E-mail is digital signaling transmitted over the telephone lines. How can it be intercepted?"

"White, I don't need you telling me what e-mail is. I, too, have read The Internet for Total Cretins or whatever the book is called."

"Sorry," Peter grinned.

"The point is, your average chat room enthusiast and on-line games player wouldn't know how to intercept an e-mail either." To be continued...
