Lauren Rosenberg
FEARBUSTERS

EFT
TAPPING

SILENT EFT TAPPING

Are you feeling stressed, anxious, fearful, depressed, in pain or just all out of sorts, especially during this time?

Want to feel happier, healthier, and attract more abundance? EFT can help you clear your blocks and limitations in all areas of your life!

Join our Silent EFT Tapping class on Mondays via Zoom where Lauren shows you how to do EFT tapping silently for 20 min with no words. This is a great way to empower yourself and learn this technique to help you in any situation. All you need to do is be present, tap away continuously, and know that others are tapping too! Everyone is welcome to join and ease away any fears and anxiety to feel happy & healthier again!

I found Lauren by chance when a friend had asked to Google EFT practitioners in North West London found her, and she lived just 3 miles away! I found her to be caring, considerate and totally non-judgemental of my issues. I met with her a few times and certainly noticed a difference, even though I was a total beginner. I would thoroughly recommend Lauren if you suffer with panic attacks, anxieties or fears. I now rely on tapping as an ongoing tool when I'm worried or anxious about anything that life throws my way. Try it, it works! RT

To the wonderful teachers & Headmaster at Bnos Beis Yaakov,
We want to tell you of our tremendous Hakaros Hatov.

Daily classes since the start of lock down with so much preparation,
Ensuring our girls continue to grow and learn with so much stimulation.

Structure each day from 9.30 until past two,
Teachers preparing with care, activities for the girls to do.

P.E challenges and art competitions for the whole school to join in with,
Keeping our girls busy in fun and creative ways has been such a gift.

Delivering to our girl's doors prizes and treats,
Along with 6 books from the school library every other week.

We are so fortunate that we send to BBY,
Look what you do for our girls and how hard you try.

Thank you so much for keeping our girls busy and happy.
Your efforts are so appreciated, love the BBY families

DARK TAPESTRY

by Ruthie Pearlman

CHAPTER THIRTY-THREE

Leora leaned over to look at Josh. "Hi, Josh. I'm a friend of your mom's. My name is Leora Jakober." His blue eyes fluttered, and he looked at Leora from above the oxygen mask.

"He's opened his eyes!" A joyful cry resounded in the auditorium.

Josh managed a very small smile. He held out a grubby, stained hand, and Leora gripped it tightly.

"How is he?" Leora asked the medic anxiously.

"Too early to tell. We need to examine him in hospital. At first glance, I would say he's dehydrated and malnourished, with a few bruises, but nothing time and good care and loving won't cure."

"Let's get him onto the stretcher and into hospital," said a kindly voice from above from the ambulance driver. "No bones broken, I gather?"

"None that we can ascertain at this juncture. Wiggle your arms and legs for us, young man, if you can manage it."

Josh wiggled obligingly and smiled weakly from behind the oxygen mask.

"Okay. Nothing seems broken. Let's move him carefully onto the stretcher. Do you want to come with him in the ambulance, miss?"

"If this young man doesn't mind, I'd like to very much," Leora said. "We'll meet your mom and dad at the hospital, okay?"

A nod, barely perceptible.

"We'll come and see you in hospital," Colin promised as the doors of the ambulance closed.

Once the ambulance had been driven off with Josh and Leora, Colin and Peter stood on the floodlit stage, alone.

"That poor kid," Colin said. "He looked barely alive. Do you think he'll be okay?"

"He'll pull through. I'll lay odds on it," Peter said.

Colin looked at Peter. "Are you all right?"

Peter smiled. "I'm fine. It's the first time I ever shot anyone. I suppose I'm a bit shaky. But I'll be all right."

"It had to be done. Gabriel was dangerous and about to shoot. You do realize that you're the hero of the hour?"

"Well..." Peter spread his hands out modestly.

"If it hadn't been for your Hamlet's father act I don't know what we would have done. Our men just couldn't get a clean shot at him. Still, there'll have to be some kind of official fuss about the fact that you actually shot him dead. We aren't in New York, you know. We're supposed to arrest people, not shoot them." He looked at Peter again. "I won't be at all surprised if you make detective inspector after this." Peter flushed, pleased. "I won't be able to order you around anymore. How shall I cope?"

They all laughed.

"Tape the whole scene," Colin ordered his men as they began putting up crime scene tape around the attic and stage. "I shall want to come back in daylight and have a good look inside that roof space. Don't want anyone touching a thing. Put someone on guard round the clock. I'll be back in the morning."

EPILOGUE

Ilana opened her eyes. She was lying on a folding cot in a hospital ward. At first, disoriented, she thought she might have had an accident. Why was she here? Was Don sick?

And then she remembered. Sitting up sharply, she saw Josh lying in a high-sided hospital bed. His eyes, with their impossibly long, dark lashes, so long they looked false, were closed. The lashes fanned his cheeks. She watched his chest rise and fall softly for a while, then reached out and touched his arm through the bars. Instantly the blue eyes opened and looked at her.

"Hello, Mummy." He smiled and the world was full of sun.

"Josh. Oh, Josh."

Don came in at that moment, dabbing his face with a towel. He had obviously been washing and shaving. He grinned broadly at his wife and son.

Your Questions Answered CORONAVIRUS Memo 13

Q: During this period my children have been constantly attached to their school hotline, calling in first thing in the morning and 'just checking' for messages from their teachers at all hours. Also, I feel my children of all ages are clinging to me and showing much more dependence than usual is this normal?

Answer:

Rabbi Eli Sufrin of TAG

There are two parts to your question, firstly regarding the attachment to the phone lines, it is no news that communication devices including plain telephones involve a high level of addiction, on the children's level they get their adrenalin rush from something new coming up on the line, be it an announcement, a comment or even a new lesson, especially if there is a chance for a personal comment from the teacher or a peer. Added to that is the nature of children to try and emulate their adult peers, and now they have the legitimate opportunity to be busy "on the phone" like their parents. This gives us the chance to act as role models in the correct levels and manner of telephone use as I will explain in the answer to the second part of your question.

You are voicing the feeling of many parents who are surprised that now with the children spending more time at home they ought to feel more secure and relaxed whilst often the fact is quite on the contrary. One major factor which must be taken in consideration is that due to many parents working at home, they may be physically nearby however they are constantly busy with their occupation and therefore cannot give the children constant attention. This can be quite disruptive, with the children seeing the parents "there" but not "there for them". What enhances the problem is that when working at home the time boundaries of work-hours tend to be compromised and the business tends to stretch through the day and night. Now more than ever it is most important to create very specific limits both in time and space in order to define between family and occupation. This will give the children the feeling that out of the work space and time their parents are totally there for them with undivided attention. This refers both to work related communication and equally to personal communication where the parents are careful not to be busy following their social life at the cost of family time. The correct behaviour on the parents' part will show an example to the children how to create limits even when using the phone for a true necessity.
