29-30 MARCH

We, the NW London Schools, salute the members of Golders Green Beth Hamedrash, Hendon Adass, Beis Hamedrash Beis Yisroel, Beis Shmuel, Edgware Adath and Beis Yissochor Dov for joining the Chomesh L'Chinuch initiative.

We thank Rabbi Greenberg, Rabbi Bixenspanner, Dayan Ehrentreu, Rabbi Halpern, Rabbi Lieberman and Rabbi Hager together with the boards of these kehillohs.

These Kehillohs have made Chinuch a community priority and donated a total of £339,000 for our schools in 2019.

Members of these kehillohs have demonstrated their commitment to solving the financial plight of our local schools by donating some or all of their chomesh (20%) of their tzedekoh donations to their respective kehilloh's Chomesh L'Chinuch funds. Launched by GGBH in 2015, Chomesh L'Chinuch held its fourth annual distribution on Sunday 8th March 2020 where £339,000 was distributed to 32 NW London schools representing 7,068 pupils. Over the past four years, it has distributed over £850,000 to NW London schools.

WE CALL ON ALL OTHER KEHILLOHS TO JOIN THIS INITIATIVE TO PROVIDE

A COMMUNAL SOLUTION TO A COMMUNAL CHALLENGE.

For more details on Chomesh L'Chinuch visit www.chinuch20.org or be in contact via info@chinuch20.org

Your Questions Answered

Q: We are currently hearing a lot of talk about the coronavirus. My children hear their friends talking about it - and the adults in school, shul and at home discussing it - how do I explain it to my child?

A Getting the facts right. It is important that you get the facts right yourself. The UOHC have provided the kehilla with very clear guidelines which are helpful.

Don't be afraid to discuss the coronavirus. Most children will have already heard about the virus so parents should not avoid talking about it. Not talking about something can actually make children worry more. Look at the conversation as an opportunity to convey the facts and set the emotional tone. You are the person who filters the news for your child. Your goal is to help your children feel informed and get fact-based information that is likely more reassuring than whatever they are hearing from their friends.

Be developmentally appropriate. Do not volunteer too much information, as this may be overwhelming. Instead, try to answer your child's questions. It is okay if you cannot answer everything; being available to your child is what matters. Take your cues from your child. Invite your child to tell you anything they may have heard about the coronavirus, and how they feel. Give them ample opportunity to ask questions. You want to be prepared to answer (but not prompt) questions. Your goal is to avoid encouraging frightening fantasies.

Deal with your own anxiety. If you notice that you are feeling anxious, take some time to calm down before trying to have a conversation or answer your child's questions. The virus is a serious threat and the necessary pre-cautions must be taken. While we are required even halachically to responsibly take care of ourselves we need to remove the 'hype'/panic aspect as it is counterproductive to properly taking care of ourselves and those we are responsible for.

Be reassuring. Children may seriously worry that they will catch it. It is helpful to reassure your child that children actually seem to be less susceptible to it.

Focus on what you are doing to stay safe. An important way to reassure children is to emphasize the safety precautions that you are taking. Children feel empowered when they know what to do to keep themselves safe. We know that the coronavirus enters the body via the eyes, nose and/or mouth, and is transmitted mostly by coughing and touching surfaces. So remind children that they are taking care of themselves by washing their hands with soap and water for 20 seconds (or the length of a "Mishenichnas Adar" song) when they come in from outside, before they eat, and after blowing their nose, coughing, sneezing or using the bathroom. Of course as Yidden we must always remember that HKB"H is the ultimate Rofeh and that we need to do our part and be mispallel.

This article has been endorsed by Dayan Shulem Friedman Shlit"z, Dr J. Horowitz and Chaim Rand MBACP

Please note that these answers are general guidelines. Each individual should consult with their Doctor/Moreh Derech.

Taxi Talks

I'm a taxi driver. No, not those yellow cab taxis that prowl the streets waiting to be flagged down. I do specifically long-distance trips, the further the better! I feel really lucky to be doing something I enjoy, while supporting my family in a respectable fashion.

Recently, a loyal customer called me up in a panic.

"Please, David, you have to help me! I have a meeting in Rockland County and my partner just informed me that he can't make it."

I'm a taxi driver. Not a businessman. And I told him that in no uncertain terms.

Mr. Segal laughed. "Oh, no, no. I don't need you to stand in for my partner. I just need you to drive me to my meeting! We were planning to go together but he has a family emergency..."

His voice trailed off as he waited for confirmation. I looked in the rearview mirror at my passengers who were heading to the airport.

"Sure thing, Mr. Segal," I replied. "When is the meeting?"

His confident tone dropped a notch. "Uh, that's the thing. It's scheduled for 11:00 a.m. That's in an hour."

"Sorry, but it's not going to work," I told him. "I'm heading to the Newark right now and even if my car sprouts wings, I wouldn't get you there on time." Mr. Segal took a deep breath and I quickly added, "But I'll see if any of my friends are available. Sit tight...and daven!"

Boruch picked up on the first ring and happily accepted. Mr. Segal was happy. Boruch was happy. A nice, neat ending to a frantic phone call.

"Thanks for the reference," Boruch told me a few days later. "I appreciate it."

"Here, take my number," I replied. "You could return the favor, when someone calls and you're not available. Just refer them to me."

Boruch looked at me as if I had said something completely ridiculous.

"No one calls me," he said, speaking slowly as if I was a toddler. "I'm signed up to a WhatsApp group for long-distance drivers. Aren't you?"

"No-o-o," I said, speaking as slowly as he had. "My simple text-free, Internet free flip phone isn't into those things."

"No one calls me," he said, speaking slowly as if I was a toddler.

I expected a chuckle at my clever turn of phrase, but Boruch merely snorted. "You're frumming out on me, huh? How do you expect to make a decent living, if you're not signed up to these groups? I'm signed up to three of them, and I'm barely making ends meet!"

"Well, I'm sure that I earn more without all those bells and whistles," I replied confidently. "Let's compare. How much did you earn this past month?"

Boruch swiped and tapped and punched some numbers until he got his grand total for the month of December. I took out my pen and my dog-eared notebook and made some quick calculations.

What do you know?

I had earned 15% more than Boruch had earned in December. And in November, as well. That's where Boruch stopped comparing. He didn't say much because the numbers had already spoken...and numbers don't lie.

CHAPTER TWENTY-FIVE

"We do need you at some time to eliminate this vagrant Greg Phelps from the equation," Colin said. "He was found in the playhouse, stinking the place out and wearing ancient smelly trainers. I got well out of the way when he took them off."

Leora laughed. "Well, I guess I've seen a lot of the sights I want to see, so I'll come back to Golders Green soon, okay?"

"That would be great," Colin said, smiling into the phone.

"I don't think I'll stay with Ilana again," Leora said. "Useful though it was to get a feel for the case, I found it a bit stifling. I'm used to living alone. Are there any apartments in the area I can rent?"

"Flats? I have no idea. I am not an estate agent. But I do happen to know one," he added with a grin.

"Mike Younger?"

"Yeah. I bet he'll pull out all the stops to find you one now he knows we're cops."

"Might as well use the protektzia where we can, huh?" Leora grinned.

"That's right," Colin said easily.

Leora frowned. Protektzia was a very Jewish word, and Colin hadn't batted an eyelid. Maybe just living in the community had familiarized him with the expressions.

No, there was more to it than that. She knew enough about her non-Jewish colleagues in New York to confirm that. Despite living in a city with one of the largest Jewish populations in the world, they remained unfamiliar with the grass-roots idioms of Jewish streetspeak. Could a simple London goyishe copper not so ingrained with Jewish culture as the New Yorkers have learned the language from walking his beat?

No. There was something going on.

As if by telepathy, Colin said, "When I next see you, Leora, I have something rather big to tell you."

I bet you do, Leora thought. "Okay."

They said their goodbyes, and the connection was broken. Colin sat for a while, looking at the phone, wondering what her reaction would be to his bombshell.

Then the switchboard put another call through to him. It was from Avi Pincus in Jerusalem.

CHAPTER TWENTY-SIX

Avi listened carefully to everything Colin was telling him about the Fox. The policeman had called Avi back so he wouldn't have to pay for the international call. At the end of it, he said, "Well, the name George Foley doesn't ring any bells, but..."

"But?" Colin asked hopefully.

"Leave it with me. There's been something biting at me ever since that night I spent at SloppyNet. I haven't yet pinned it down, but I shall."

"You found the name and address of Bill Venice a.k.a. Shake a.k.a. Shakespeare a.k.a. Bill Valence a.k.a. George Foley," Colin filled in. "Not that it got us anywhere because he had already moved on when we went to visit that house. He had left only a few days before we showed up. We were that close."

"And the real estate agent was of no help?"

"Well, his description of the guy he let the house to matched all the other descriptions we've had for the Fox. He didn't see any woman or kid with him, yet the guy had a Toys R Us bag with him containing a color Gameboy, which, according to the Hardmans, was Josh's favorite toy or one he really wanted."

"All meaningless on its own, but adding up to a whole picture," Avi mused. "Look, as I said, let me have a think about this for a while. I'll call you back ASAP."

"Okay," Colin said and hung up. Avi Pincus was a decent sort of a bloke. Seemed very bright, too. He'd make a good detective.

Colin shook the thought off. Avi Pincus was living in Israel, busy with his own life. How many more cases like Josh Hardman was he likely to encounter? Not too many, he hoped. Meanwhile, Leora Jakober was on her way back to Golders Green.

Colin realized with a start that he hadn't thought about Lucy at all in the past few hours.

Avi Pincus sat at his home computer and thought about SmallNet Ltd. and his brief stint there as an employee. He tried to order in his mind the sequence of events of that night. He remembered the boss, Renard Lukavac, and Marty who showed him the ropes. He remembered fixing the computers and then spending the dark, quiet hours looking for log files and eventually finding the caller log of a Mr. Bill Venice and the address from which he was calling. He remembered the cleaner, mopping silently around him until it was time for him to leave, too. He remembered calling Baruch in the wee small hours and telling him of his exciting find.

What was it that was niggling him? Something... Something just out of reach, tantalizing him like a carrot on a stick in front of a trotting donkey, keeping him moving ever forward.

Let's work this out. Methodically. Person by person, event by event.

Avi's brain hurt as he tried to remember.

Colin found Leora Jakober a flat through a nervous Mike Younger, who thought it prudent to cooperate rather than make problems. The flat was small but nicely furnished and sunny, and Leora said this would do very nicely, thank you, and she would be fine. She moved around the apartment, arranging her personal things. Within a few moments, it looked homey, as if she had always lived there. Colin was impressed. She had her own electric kettle, which she had bought when she left the Hardmans, and offered him and Peter a cup of tea or coffee. They declined, saying they had to get back. Leora looked at Colin questioningly. She was very curious as to the "big thing" he was going to tell her about.

Colin remembered from his Orthodox roots that it was improper for him to be alone with Leora; he thought it might be a problem even if Peter was present, too, but he wasn't sure. Something was telling him, Keep your distance. Leave the door ajar. (He had.) Don't have coffee in her apartment.

He, who had spent time alone with Lucy, now would not spend time alone with Leora Jakober. Interesting, he said to himself. He felt himself drifting more toward his roots, but he was far, far from ready to take up the full gauntlet of his faith. And yet...

And yet.

Something was making him keep his distance from Leora Jakober.

All these thoughts happened in an instant, while she was looking at him expectantly.

"I do have things I need to talk to you about, Ms. Jakober," he said, shocking even himself with the use of the proper form of address, "but maybe I can do so either at the station or over a cup of coffee and something to eat at a restaurant?"

Leora colored a touch. "Detective Inspector Sommers, are you inviting me out to dinner?" Peter's mouth dropped as he witnessed this exchange.

She doesn't even know I am Jewish yet, Colin thought, bemused. Or maybe she does. Women are clever like that.
