The Lifeline that Cannot Stop.

Inside the extraordinary operation sustaining hundreds of yeshivos and kollelim, month after month.

Reb Yitzy Rokowsky

Reb Leiby Levison

Reb Motty Weinberger

After two extraordinary appeals, London is preparing to welcome the Gedolei Yisroel for a third time. Why is the crisis still so urgent – and how does the Keren make sure the money reaches the yeshivos?

A conversation with Reb Leiby Levison founder of Keren Olam Hatorah UK, Reb Yitzy Rokowsky, a board member of Keren Olam HaTorah, and Reb Motty Weinberger, who oversees the Keren's distributions in Eretz Yisroel.

"How much do you think we can raise?"

That was the question put to Reb Leiby Levison when the possibility of bringing the Gedolei Yisroel to London was first raised. The organisers knew that London cared deeply about the Torah world in Eretz Yisroel. What they did not know was how far that commitment could stretch.

The answer surprised them. London, in Reb Leiby's words, "punched above its weight". When the Gedolim returned the following year, the community did better still.

On Sunday, 1 November, the Gedolim are due to return once more. This time, however, there is a difficult question hanging over the anticipation: after two years of remarkable generosity, why must the appeal continue?

The answer lies not only in the size of the funding cuts, but in the way the Keren works: monthly commitments, fixed eligibility rules, independent checks, and a determination that a donor's influence should never decide which mosad receives support.

A Crisis That Renews Itself Every Month

Reb Leiby, London has already responded twice. Why is the need just as pressing in the third year?

Reb Leiby Levison: The most important thing to understand is that the cuts have not stopped. The Keren was established at the request of the Gedolei Yisroel when the Israeli government cut its funding to yeshivos and kollelim. That money was part of the income those mosdos had been receiving, and the shortfall returns every month.

People naturally think of a campaign in terms of a target: you raise the money, you reach the target, and the matter is settled. But a yeshivah cannot look at it that way. The campaign may be over, but the bills keep coming. Another month arrives, another payroll, another struggle to keep the doors open. The Keren has to be able to make those payments month after month.

Were the Yeshivos and Kollelim managing comfortably before these cuts?

Reb Leiby: No. Yeshivos and kollelim always had to raise money beyond what they received from government funding. There was already a gap between their income and their expenses. The cuts did not replace that ordinary fundraising burden; they came on top of it.

It is hard enough for a rosh yeshivah to cover his existing deficit. If he were suddenly expected to replace this additional funding as well, many yeshivos and kollelim simply would not be able to function. That is why I feel so strongly that this cannot be treated as just another annual campaign.

Hundreds of millions have already been raised. Why are the Mosdos Hatorah still struggling?

Reb Leiby: It has made an enormous difference - because it has gone out to the mosdos. In the first year alone, the Keren distributed 530 million shekels to yeshivos and kollelim, and the sums needed have continued to increase.

The Keren is replacing the funding that was taken away, shekel for shekel. Those hundreds of millions have not been sitting in a bank account. They have been keeping the doors of the yeshivos and Kollelim open. The achievement of the past two years is that the mosdos have continued receiving what they lost. It does not mean they no longer need that money.

So what would happen if the Keren were unable to make a distribution?

Reb Leiby: Simply put, without this money, many yeshivos and kollelim would be fighting for their very existence. They are already working to cover their normal expenses. To place the entire additional burden back on them would be more than many could bear. That is the seriousness of the situation, and it is why the Gedolim are still travelling to raise the funds.

The Donor Who Put the Rules to the Test

When a fund distributes such large sums, one question soon follows: who decides who is entitled to receive them? The answer, it turns out, can be tested in uncomfortable ways.

Reb Yitzy, suppose someone gives the Keren a million pounds and asks you to include a yeshivah particularly close to him. Does that carry weight?

Reb Yitzy Rokowsky: It cannot change the cri-

"The Keren's money is not mine. It belongs to the yeshivos. Who am I to give away money that was entrusted to us for another purpose?"

teria. If the mosad qualifies, it belongs on the list. If it does not, we cannot add it because the donor is important or because somebody has a personal connection to the rosh yeshivah.

The principle is that a qualifying institution which previously received government funding and then lost it can have that cut replaced by the Keren. A donor is entirely welcome to give privately to another yeshivah. But he cannot use his contribution to alter who is eligible for the Keren's money. We have not made exceptions for mosdos that fall outside the rules.

That sounds simple enough on paper. Is it still simple when a major supporter is personally involved?

Reb Motty Weinberger: Let me tell you what happened with a large kollel in Beit Shemesh. Its funding was stopped after an inspection uncovered a discrepancy in the numbers it had reported. One of the Keren's major supporters then contacted us. He had donated a very substantial sum, and the kollel was associated with his own circle. Why, he wanted to know, was it not receiving its allocation?

The size of his donation made no difference. The rules were the rules. We looked into the matter again, carried out a further inspection and established that some of the people on the submitted list were connected with nearby institutions. The kollel corrected its lists, and only then were the payments restored.

Afterwards, the donor telephoned. He told us, in effect, that he had wanted to see whether we would stand by the rules even when he pressed us. That was the test.

And what did you take from it?

Reb Motty: That the money is not ours to distribute according to our preferences. Sometimes somebody approaches me face to face and asks for an exception. I tell him: I can reach into my own pocket and give you whatever few shekels I have. But the Keren's money is not mine. It belongs to the yeshivos. Who am I to give away money that was entrusted to us for another purpose?

How do the roshei yeshivos themselves react when you query their figures?

Reb Motty: I remember another yeshivah headed by a very prominent rosh yeshivah - somebody who had personally done a great deal for the Keren. Its lists needed correcting, and we insisted on it. When he heard, he asked to examine the lists himself. He went through the names himself, spotted an older bochur listed as an avreich and immediately told us to take him off. Nobody had asked him to do that.

That is the attitude we generally see. Mosdos contact us when an avreich leaves, when a detail changes, and sometimes even when money has to be returned. The same people who depend on these payments understand why the figures must be correct.

Who Actually Decides the Figures?

Reb Motty, take us through the process. When a yeshivah submits its information, what happens next?

Reb Motty: We deliberately built a system in which there is not one individual sitting in an office deciding what everybody deserves. The rosh yeshivah or rosh kollel enters the information directly. The software checks the relevant records: were these talmidim previously funded? Are they listed at another institution? How much would they have received under the earlier government arrangements?

The payment is then calculated according to fixed rules. We cross-check the information against other records, and inspectors visit where necessary. It is very important to us that inspections are carried out discreetly and respectfully. We have to verify every figure. But we must never forget whose figures we are checking - these are roshei yeshivos and roshei kollelim.

What happens when a genuine question falls outside the ordinary rules?

Reb Motty: We are shluchei d'Rabbanan. We are carrying out the instructions of the Gedolei Yisroel who established the Keren, not making up our own policy. When there is a substantive question, or a halachic issue, it goes to the Gedolim - generally to Rav Moshe Hillel Hirsch, who examines the details.

And who checks the people operating the system?

Reb Motty: No payment can leave without two people signing off. There are detailed monthly reports recording each mosad's allocation and changes from one month to the next. When a figure changes, questions are asked. Donors can request to review the reports as well.

Reb Yitzy, how do you keep the funds secure while all these payments are being made?

Reb Yitzy: We approach financial controls as seriously as any business would. There are continual attempts to defraud bank accounts, so the Keren's main account is tightly restricted. No ordinary cheques, no ACH withdrawals. Money moves through a controlled transfer route, and a transfer outside that route needs five approvals.

We move what is needed into the payment account for distribution instead of leaving money there unnecessarily. The system is designed to move the funds to the mosdos promptly while protecting the main account.

A Zechus Placed in Our Hands

Reb Leiby Levison reflects on the remarkable zechuyos of our generation: sustaining the Torah world - and welcoming its Gedolim into our own community.

"I believe we are living through something that has never happened before in the history of Klal Yisroel.

"On the one hand, I believe there are more lomdei Torah in the world today than we have ever had - tens of thousands in Eretz Yisroel, and so many more in America and throughout the world.

"And on the other hand, baruch Hashem, we have been blessed with what may be the greatest number of tomchei Torah in our history. Hakadosh Baruch Hu has given Klal Yisroel the means to support those who are learning.

"For so long, a significant share of that support came through government funding. Now that this funding has been taken away, there is another way of looking at what has happened: a zechus that was being carried elsewhere has been placed into the hands of Klal Yisroel.

"We have the opportunity to support the yeshivos and kollelim ourselves. We have been given the means to do it - and the zechus of doing it.

"And there is another remarkable zechus that Hashem has given our generation: the privilege of having the Gedolei HaDor here amongst us. We are not merely hearing about these giants of Torah and yiras Shamayim from afar. They are coming to London. We have the opportunity to see them with our own eyes, to listen to their words, and to be inspired by their presence.

"And we can bring our children and our families. To give a child the chance to see a gadol up close - to see what a lifetime of Torah and yiras Shamayim looks like - is a gift beyond words. Long after the gatherings are over, that memory, that impression of genuine Torah greatness, can remain with them.

"What extraordinary zechuyos we have been given. The blessing of our generation is not only that we can help sustain the Torah world, but that we can welcome its Gedolim into our midst, learn from them, and pass that inspiration on to the next generation."

"Behind every payment is a yungerman, a family, a yeshivah trying to get through another month.

How can we tell them that London has already done enough?"

Where Does a London Pound Go?

Reb Leiby, you have been particularly clear about the promise that every pound given to the Keren reaches the yeshivos and Kollelim. How does that work in practice?

Reb Leiby: When someone gives in London - or anywhere in the world - the donation goes to the Keren for the yeshivos and kollelim. The costs of running the campaigns are not deducted from that ordinary donation. Administration, travel and the other expenses are covered separately by individuals and through the arrangements made in each country.

That distinction matters. People are entitled to know what happens when they give. It is not only a question of saying that the money is intended for the Mosdos; the arrangements are made so that the campaign and operating expenses do not come out of those donations.

And is there a way to see what the institutions actually receive?

Reb Leiby: Yes. The yeshivos and Kollelim provide their lists at the beginning of the year and update them if something changes. We receive monthly reports showing what each yeshivah is getting. The point is that each institution has a specific monthly allocation, and there is a report of what it received. Donors are not being asked to rely on a vague promise.

Transfers and currency conversion still cost money. How are those handled?

Reb Yitzy: We negotiate very carefully. The fee agreed with the transfer provider was 0.19 per cent, covering conversion and payments, and we have been looking at a still cheaper arrangement. At these volumes, even a very small percentage matters.

Reb Motty: Nobody pretends the operation has no costs. Of course it does. But designated private donors cover those costs separately so that the regular donations are available for the mosdos.

London Has Answered Before

The conversation returns to the streets of London, and to the remarkable journeys being undertaken by the Gedolim themselves.

Reb Leiby, what strikes you most about the Gedolim travelling from country to country for this cause?

Reb Leiby: Look at where they are going: across Europe, through North and South America - even to places such as Panama. It is an extraordinary thing to see the Gedolei HaDor travelling around the world to raise support for this Keren. At their age, and with everything they carry on their shoulders, these journeys are an extraordinary undertaking.

They would not be doing this if they did not understand just how vital

"Behind every payment is a yungerman, a family, a yeshivah trying to get through another month. How can we tell them that London has already done enough?"

the need is. They know what happens to the yeshivos and kollelim if the monthly support does not arrive. When the Gedolim themselves undertake such journeys, it tells you how seriously they view the situation.

How did London come to play such a prominent part?

Reb Leiby: When the idea of coming to London was first discussed, the organisers asked us, "How much do you think we can raise?" There was no guarantee of what would happen. But London punched above its weight. The response was far beyond what had been expected.

Then the Gedolim came back the second year, and London did better than it had in the first. To me, that says something about the kehillah. The baalei batim understood what was at stake, and the feeling was shared across the community. It was not simply the work of one or two people.

After everything London has already given, can you really ask people to dig deeper a third time?

Reb Leiby: It gives me great hope. We have seen what London can do, and we have seen that people take this responsibility seriously. I really hope London will do even better this year than in the past two years. We would all have been much happier if there was no need for another campaign. But the reality is that the need has not gone away. There is a yungerman sitting and learning whose kollel is relying on this support. There is a family for whom that small monthly stipend means being able to manage another month. And then there is the entire Olam HaYeshivos, which has come to depend on the Keren as a lifeline. Behind every payment is a yungerman, a family, a yeshivah trying to get through another month. How can we tell them that London has already done enough? As long as they are counting on us, we have to be there for them.

And what would you say to someone who is thinking, "I have already given twice. How much more can I be asked to do?"

Reb Leiby: I would ask him to look at what will happen if the money is not there. The yeshivos and kollelim do not have the option of saying they have already managed for two years and can therefore manage without the next payment.

I ask, in the name of the yeshivos, the kollelim, the Gedolim and Klal Yisroel: do everything you can. Give what you can, and then see whether you can stretch a little further. The Torah world in Eretz Yisroel is counting on us.

Two years ago, the organisers asked what London could achieve. The community answered once, and then answered again.

On 1 November, the Gedolim return not to mark the end of a crisis, but because the next month's support for the yeshivos must still be found. London knows what is being asked. This time, it knows exactly why.

Chaim Yankel was a happy fellow but, unfortunately, terribly overweight. Concerned for his well-being, his coworkers forced him to go on a diet.

For three weeks, Chaim Yankel resisted temptation, even changing his route to work to avoid his favorite bakery - Isaac's Bakery.

But then one day, to the horror of his workmates, Chaim Yankel turned up at the office clutching a massive chocolate cake. When his colleagues berated him, Chaim Yankel was quick to offer an explanation.

"I accidentally drove by Isaac's Bakery this morning, and there were so many tasty treats in the window. I thought it was bashert that I was supposed to eat something, so I davened to Hashem, saying: "If you want me to have one of those delicious chocolate cakes, show me a sign; let there be a parking space directly in front of the bakery. And sure enough, the eighth time around the block, there it was!"
