COGMED WORKS

Cogmed is the single most scientifically validated method that improves attention and working memory.

Working memory is Vital for concentration, reasoning, learning, and resisting distractions.

Cogmed is a 5 to 10 weeks training program, for all ages, available in different languages.

An individualized protocol, computer based, with an adjustment to one's level and age, assuring constant challenging tasks.

A qualified psychologist will motivate the user by providing support, guidance, planning, knowledge and feedback about his progress.

"Cogmed's research is spectacular. For the amount of time that Cogmed Working Memory Training has been available, the research has blown everybody else away and has really changed what neurologists think about working memory."

Ph.D, specialized in treatment of ADHD"

SHUVU

The Class Posek

Seeing Amir Poliakov today in his Shuvu Beit Shemesh School, it's hard to believe how far this seventh grader has come.

With an Arab father who lives in Hevron and a Jewish Russian mother, no one would have dreamed that he would become the “class posek”!

But indeed, young Amir has a companion which he takes everywhere: his pocket-size Mishnah Berurah.

Whenever a discussion breaks out in his class regarding what the correct halachah is, his classmates turn to him. “Amir, what is the halachah here?”

Amir flips through his set of Mishnah Berurah and “paskens” for his classmates.

On Rosh Chodesh Tammuz, one of the seventh graders remembered that he hadn't said Yaaleh V'Yavo during Shacharis. His rebbi watched emotionally as Amir quickly flipped through his sefarim and told his classmate that indeed he must repeat Shemoneh Esrei. “But I already took off my tefillin,” the inquirer continued. “Do I have to put them back on?” Amir opened his Mishnah Berurah again and paskened, “No, you do not have to put them back on.”

Your Questions Answered

Q: I am a Year 7 Rebbe. One of my pupils is currently going through a difficult time at home. I often encounter this difficulty, in such situations to what extent is the school expected to help? Is it fair to ask the parents (who we know are struggling with a difficult situation) to pitch in and help their child as well? As much as it is hard there is a limit to how much a school setting can help a child. I would very much appreciate getting some guidance and advice.

A: R' Yehuda Yoine Silberstein שליט"א, Menahel Talnud Torah Bobov 45

Answer: It is always beneficial to work together with the parents of the child. Working together as a team there can be many ways to help the child because the bigger the picture is the clearer the way forward becomes. We see a lot of success with parents who are willing to work together with the school. When a child needs emotional help, the school can find the right therapist. When a child is struggling academically and needs extra tutoring, the school can help the parents to find a private teacher who can work well with this particular child. During difficult times it must of course be done with sensitivity and understanding. When there is trust on both sides we can find better ways to help the child.

R' Yakov Meir Steinmetz שליט"א, SENCo – Talmud Torah Chaim Meirim, Viznitz

Answer: It is important to be very clear and know what help the child actually needs. It is worthwhile for the school to get professional help in order to assess exactly what help the child needs, how the school can help out and what can then be realistically expected from the child. Bringing in a professional therapist or educational consultant has the benefit of having someone who understands the situation from an objective point of view. The therapist or consultant able to be supportive and guide the parents and the school towards the shared goal of helping the child in the best possible way.

R' Pinchas G. שליט"א, Father of M. – a client of Zeh LoZeh.

Answer: When we were going through a very difficult illness with one of our children it literally took over our lives. It was during that time that our son's school called up to say that he seems to be struggling and needs help. It was completely overwhelming for us to hear that another child needed us to really be there for him. At a loss with what to do, we contacted Zeh LoZeh who helped us through it step by step, enabling us to work as a team together with the school. They were amazing and gave us the support we needed in order to help our child. In fact we were better able to care for both of our children. My message to teachers out there is: please include the parents, it is our child and essentially we know our child best. Right now we may not have the emotional resources to really be there, but please do not take our place. We want to help even if it may not be as much as we would under different circumstances.

Please note that these answers are general guidelines. Each individual should consult with their Rav or Moreh Derech.

Zeh LoZeh was set up in order to support emotional health within the community. Since its inception in 2016 Zeh LoZeh has impacted thousands of families, schools and children through raising awareness, insets and trainings, therapy and advice line. Zeh LoZeh has the Haskomos of local and international Rabbonim as well as the endorsement of leading professionals.

The background of the poster is a low-angle shot of several tall, modern skyscrapers with glass facades. The sky is a pale, hazy blue. In the foreground, a bright, glowing yellow path leads from the bottom center towards the base of the buildings. The path is flanked by dark, jagged, rock-like structures. In the upper right corner, a large, white, stylized spiderweb is superimposed over the image. The overall mood is mysterious and dramatic.

DARK TAPESTRY

by Ruthie Pearlman

"Before the Segals. Now let me think. I have all the details at the office, of course, not here."

"Try to remember. It can't be that difficult, even for you. It was only a few days ago."

If the barb hit home, Mike displayed no sign of it.

"Oh, yes, it was a gentleman. I recall exactly because we don't usually do short-term lets. Six months is the minimum, and this gentleman wanted it for only a week or two, he said. At first I refused, but he offered to pay twice the rental, and I checked with the homeowner. Since we had this little gap between two long-term tenants anyhow, I said okay."

"Do you recall the name of the gentleman?" Peter asked.

"Bill something or other, I believe. Valence?"

"Could it have been Venice?"

"Oh, I don't think so. I'd have remembered an unusual name like that."

Doubtful, Colin thought, but pressed on.

"Can you describe him to us?"

Mike's face showed the strain of effort. "Well, he was tall and sort of thin and had longish hair, sort of down to here."

"How old would you say he was?"

"Hard to tell. Mid- to late thirties, maybe?"

"Did he say the letting was for him alone or did he have anyone with him? A wife and child, one or the other?"

"When I showed him the property, he was on his own. He didn't mention anyone but..."

"But?"

"I noticed something. He was carrying a Toys R Us bag. And there was definitely a toy inside."

"He could have just been buying a present for a nephew or friend's kid," Leora pointed out.

"Yes, of course he could. Silly me," Mike said.

"Did you see what kind of toy was in the bag?"

"Well, the only reason I did was because it was brightly colored, and the bags are so thin these days. And it was a toy I fancied buying for myself. Silly, I know. It was one of those new color Gameboys. I've been addicted to Gameboys for ages, and the color ones promise much better graphics —"

"But he made no specific mention of a child or wife?"

"None. And since he was only in the property a short while, I never went there to speak with him, so I have no idea if he brought anyone else to live there with him."

"I'd be very grateful if you could find out the exact name of the tenant and any previous or forwarding addresses he gave to you," Colin said firmly.

"I'll do that first thing in the morning when the office opens," Mike said.

"Are you a key holder of your office?"

Mike looked affronted at last.

"Key holder? I own the company." He puffed out his skinny chest so that he looked like a concave pigeon.

"Ah, you own the company," Colin mused.

"Well, in that case, sir, we'd greatly appreciate it if you would go into your offices today and get me out the relevant information. Phone me on my mobile, okay?"

"Today? Go into the office?"

"Yes, please, and pronto," Colin said firmly.

"There is a child's life at stake here and waiting till your offices open tomorrow does not sit very well with me. Call me impatient, but that's how it is, sunshine."

Mike swallowed. "All right. I'll go straightaway."

"What a good idea. In fact, if you like, we can drive you there, wait while you retrieve the relevant files, and drop you back here. All part of the service, sir. How's that?"

Ten minutes later, they were standing in his office and waiting for his computer to boot. Mike tapped some keys. "Ah, here we are. Gosh, I was right. It was Bill Valence. Here are the addresses he gave for his previous and forwarding."

They dropped him back home and sat despondently in the car.

"Of course he wouldn't use his own name. Why should he? He's far too smart," Leora said, looking at the scribbled names and addresses. "So I guess the addresses are false, too."

"Very often when people change their names they keep the initials the same," Colin said. "Bill Valence, Bill Venice."

"So you think this is the Fox," Peter said.

"I'm sure of it," Colin answered. "Now we have a name or two, all we have to do is find him. Simple." He pulled away from the curb with a screech of rubber. "First Karen Whitestone. Get her on the phone."

Peter punched in the number. "Karen Whitestone" came the voice over the speaker.

"Detective Inspector Colin Sommers here."

"Oh, yes. How can I help you, Inspector?"

"We just wondered if you'd heard from Cindy."

"No. I would have phoned you. I do keep my word, you know." An edge to her voice, like a serrated blade.

"I'm sure you would, I'm sure you would. One more question I wanted to ask you. You remember that sci-fi book I requisitioned as evidence?"

"Of course I do. Enjoy it, did you?"

"Heh. Well, I didn't read it, actually. Not yet anyway. A slip of paper fell out as I opened it. A note from someone who calls himself Will. A literary couplet. Do you know anyone called Will associated with Cindy?"

"Will is Cindy's boyfriend. Of course I know him," Karen said impatiently. The voice, coming as it did over the tinny speaker in the car, drew sharp intakes of breath from the three passengers.

Leora called out from the back seat, "Mrs. White, you don't know me. I'm Leora Jakober, a criminologist working on this case. Could I ask you, how long has Cindy known this man and have you ever met him?"

"I have no idea how long they have known each other. I have met him once or twice. To be honest, I think he is far too old for her. She's only a slip of a girl, and he's almost old enough to be her father. They're into completely different things, different music, different social scenes. I've had a few words with her about him. As her landlady I sort of feel responsible, a bit like a mother figure, but of course she resents me interfering. If you ask me, I think he has some kind of hold over her."

"Hold? What kind of hold?"

"It's as if he's mesmerized her. Well, I suppose he must have some charismatic charm to do that, although I can't see it. He seems a bit unpleasant to me. But he has obviously charmed this girl."

"Can you describe him to us, please?" Colin asked.

"Tall, gangly, long-haired, sort of sixties-looking, if you know what I mean. Today's youth would wear a ponytail, but he seems proud to have it just hanging. Penetrating blue eyes. I think at one stage or other he had a beard, but he might have shaved it off; it wasn't a long-term growth."

"Do you have any idea at all where Cindy might be found? Any places she used to hang out when she wasn't at home?"

"I can only presume she is with Will, Inspector. And from the little I know of him, he's a bit of a nomadic type, so heaven alone knows where they are."

Colin sighed as loudly as he could.

"I'm sorry," Karen said. "I am telling you everything I know."
