Summer Holiday Camp

Only 2 weeks Week 1: 29th July - 2nd August Week 2: 5th August - 10th August £30 per day (extra £5 for early drop off per day 9am instead of 10) £120 per week until 31st May then £140 per week.
Hendon High school Golders Rise Hendon NW4 2HP

Kick it develops skills such as eye-hand co-ordination, balance ball control, upper limb dexterity and strength, concentration and more! Parents have been so proud of the skills their children developed in just one week! If you want a camp which is not just "babysitting" or keeping your kids occupied, then send them to Playball this summer where they will receive lasting benefits!

"The improvement in her self esteem and confidence is remarkable!" commented a mother after last year's camp.

You may never have entered the Viznitz court or encountered the emes and kedusha of the Rebbe and his Chassidim. Nonetheless, something about Viznitz impacts you, me, and all yidden whether we are consciously aware of this impact or not. All yidden are part of Viznitz. The eternal ideals of Viznitz-- the desire to live as true Ovdei Hashem, to live with an awareness of a glorious past and to have aspirations for an illustrious future are ideals that are relevant for yidden in all corners of the world. And like a guiding light, Viznitz, with its exemplary values and emphasis on middos and emes is there to show the way to all. In Viznitz, the soul is uplifted as it experiences the simcha of performing a mitzvah with a pure heart, true pnimiyus and untainted emuna -- all with the singular purpose of clinging to Hashem and serving Him wholeheartedly.

In Viznitz, we see the epitome of the three significant values every Viznitzer Chassid lives by: Ahavas Hashem Yisbarach, -Ahavas haTorah - Ahavas Yisroel. In the Heichal of Viznitz, the trickling wellsprings of the Chassidus and its Torah swell into flowing rivers of Torah, spiritually rejuvenating thousands of neshamos throughout the entire world. And this tremendous koach continuously emanates from the light, the teachings and the emes of the Viznitzer Rebbe.

The Viznitzer Rebbe

Many say that the Viznitzer Rebbe is the Rebbe of Klal Yisroel. Or to put it simply: the Heart of Am Yisroel. The Viznitzer Rebbe indeed bears the weight of the generation on his shoulders, his pure heart feeling the pain and suffering of all Klal Yisroel and his genuine concern includes the well-being of all yidden. Because for the Viznitzer Rebbe, all yidden are one, everyone has a share in the world of emes, and no one is a 'fremder'- an outsider. All are welcome, as evidenced by the mosaic of people who come to confer with the Rebbe, all longing to absorb some of his kedusha, to come closer to the emes he personifies, to be heartened by this warmth, and to bask in the presence of this giant in middos. Because everyone knows that in Viznitz, defenses dissolve. Everyone knows that in Viznitz, there are no divisions, no distinctions. Everyone knows that in the Viznitzer Rebbe's heart, there is room for all.

'Beis Viznitz'

'Beis Viznitz', now turning into a reality, is the result of the Rebbe's great vision and tremendous ambition--to take all this good and all this light, and make it accessible to every Yid, whoever he may be --to allow every Yid to be part of the world of Viznitz. Beis Viznitz will not just be an exquisite edifice to house the large crowds coming to daven and learn, and to accommodate the world renowned 'Viznitz Tischen' and simchos celebrations; Beis Viznitz will be a Makom Kadosh that will encapsulate the essence of Torah learning, the unparalleled experience of Viznitze Tefilla that has the ability to envelop every yid, while penetrating the neshomo and uplifting the heart of every mispalel, Beis Viznitz will not simply house the hundreds of thousands of "Amen. Yehei Shmei Rabbos" that will ring out within its sacred walls; it will be the launchpad taking these zechusim straight up to Shechina Hakdosha. Who does not want a part in this? As we stand in the development stages of Beis Viznitz, by supporting this cause, you too can now have a share in all of this! A Share in all of this A share in this makom kodesh, in the multitude of tefillas, in the spiritual uplifting, in the kedusha, in the light that guides all of us-- all of Klal Yisroel --and in the heart-rendering tefillos of the huge tziibur inspired and led by the Viznitzer Rebbe, this pillar of tefilla, is now asking for our assistance, appealing to us and promising that all who give will be blessed from Above. Be part of this tremendous endeavor, and you too will see the bounty of blessings the Rebbe has promised!

DARK TAPESTRY

by Ruthie Pearlman

"So how do you afford this place, then?" White asked.

"This is me own place. Me husband, George, bought it afore the war. I didn't like it then, and I like it even less now. But it's somewhere to live, better'n a park bench."

"So Cindy Wallis never lived here?"

"Did I say that? She might have lived here before I came back. We had tenants. Flat-sharing girls, office workers. She might have been one of them."

"Do you have any records of your tenants?"

"Yes, somewhere. Who knows where, though. Could be anywhere." She made a vague gesture.

"Look, we need to trace her. Did you have an agent who handled the leases?" Colin said with increasing exasperation.

"An agent? Too posh for the likes of us. Nah, we did it ourself. George was real methodical. It's me what has let things go to pot. But if you need to find her, I'll look for the tenants' records."

"Thank you," said Colin, and waited for her to get up and start looking. She made no move.

"Not now," she said when she realized they were waiting. "Later."

"Now," Colin said forcefully. "White here will make us all another cuppa, won't you, White, and while he's doing that, you're going to look for those records."

"Slavedriver," muttered the old woman, but she got up and shuffled over to a wall of cupboards, which she started opening and closing.

"What's your name, then?" White asked.

"Gladys. Gladys Jones."

"Nice to meet you, Gladys."

"Slavedriver," she muttered again, continuing to open and shut drawer after drawer, closet after closet. "Oh, here it is. In this red tin box.

I remember now. He kept all the records in red tin biscuit boxes." She pulled it out and brought it over to the table. Inside was a neat index card system.

Thumbing through the cards, Colin quickly found that Cindy Wallis had indeed been a tenant there three years before. She had been the last tenant before Gladys had moved back in.

"If she was the last tenant, maybe you met her when you moved in and she moved out," suggested Colin.

Gladys thought hard. "Oh, yeah," she said, and the two men could almost see the lightbulb going on over her head. "Blonde, wasn't she?"

"Yes. Blonde, blue-eyed."

"I remember her. She paid the last of her rent and said she was moving on. Said she had better places to stay in than this dump. Can't say I blame her."

"Did she say where she was going? Leave a forwarding address for her post, maybe?"

"If she'd left one, it would be in here. George was very methodical. Oh, look here. 'Moving to Edgware.' Said it was more countrified out there. I've never been to Edgware, so I wouldn't know."

Edgware was a suburb of London only two stops further north on the subway lines, but the way Gladys described it, she made it sound like some exotic foreign resort. She handed Colin a card on which George had inscribed a forwarding address.

"Thanks a lot," Colin said, pocketing the card. "And thanks for the tea. It was delicious." He reached into his other pocket. "Here's a tenner for expenses. Help you pay for your TV license, too."

Gladys stuffed the ten-pound note into her apron before the two men could blink. Outside they looked at each other.

"Edgware?" said White.

"Edgware," confirmed Colin.

"Here's your room," said Baruch, opening the guest room door with a flourish. He expected some comment about the comfortable facilities, since he and his wife had gone to some considerable trouble to prepare the room.

Avi casually flung his overnight bag onto the bed and looked around the room. Baruch waited.

"Where's the computer?" he asked.

Baruch sighed inwardly. "It's in the study. Follow me."

Avi took a quick look at the PC. "Pentium III with sixty-four megabytes RAM. Hmm, not bad," he said to himself. He spent the next few moments attaching and configuring his modem to the machine, then loading the free month's trial Internet account. As the amazed and computer illiterate Baruch watched, Avi had logged onto the Net within ten minutes of encountering the computer.

Avi then looked at the printout of the e-mail apparently sent from himself. "Whose computer did this land on?" he asked.

"Don's. We arranged it so that all mail in connection with the case would be written from and to one machine. Pinny thought it would make things easier to control."

"Yes, it makes it easier, but it also made it easier for the Fox to monitor and intercept the mail. If it had been randomly sent, it would have been almost impossible for the Fox to know where an e-mail was coming from and to whom it was destined. Oh, well. I need more than a printout, because I think there are hidden headers his e-mail reader isn't displaying or printing."

Baruch frowned. "I don't like bothering Don Hardman," he said worriedly. "He has quite enough on his plate."

"I can ask him to send it on to me here," Avi said. "It will still have all the original hidden headers on it."

A phone call to Don proved fruitful, and a few moments later the e-mail landed in Baruch Weiss's PC. Baruch was impressed.

"How about some coffee and a piece of cake?" Baruch offered hopefully. He was hungry and tired after his trip to the airport.

"Yes, thanks," Avi said distractedly. It was obvious he was the sort of man who would forget to eat unless someone put the food in front of him. Not a syndrome the ample Baruch had ever suffered from.

Baruch went downstairs to prepare himself and Avi a much-needed cup of coffee and an extra large slice of yeast cake.

Avi munched and drank without paying the food and drink much attention, unlike Baruch himself, who was relishing every mouthful.

He brought up the e-mail and studied it carefully. Then he went into the e-mail reader and studied that. Baruch was sitting very still and quiet, as if to disturb him would be to ruin all chances of success. Avi sat thinking for a while, then he started typing furiously. His fingers flew over the keys so fast that Baruch couldn't even see what was being typed. Avi saved what he had done and rebooted the computer. While they waited, Baruch dared to ask what Avi was looking for.

"Shh. Just wait."

Baruch, suitably chastised, waited. Once the computer had rebooted, Avi went back into the e-mail program and brought up the relevant e-mail.

"Bingo!" he shouted.

"What? What? What?"

"Look," Avi pointed. At the top of the e-mail there was now a line of figures.

192.168.100.1

"Yesss," Avi hissed.

Baruch stared at the line of figures. "What on earth are those?"
