Rabbi Yossi Goldberg

בנו של הרה"צ ר' שמואל גולדברג, רב רבית המדרש דמשק אליעזר

Rabbi Yossi Goldberg is an alumnus of ישיבת שער תורה Manchester and ישיבת אברך. After learning in ישיבת מיר for a number of years as an אברך, he began to help בחורים individually and, after moving to Manchester, continued to learn and mentor בחורים who had left ישיבה to work. His warm and approachable style, together with his unshakeable belief in every person's potential, has had a profound impact on those with whom he has worked. Recently, he graduated from כולל נחלת אליעזר, the Rabbinic Training Academy (London) and has now returned to Manchester to found ישיבת בנין אדם.

ראש הישיבה

Rabbi EE Rubinstein

Rabbi Eliyohu Eliezer Rubinstein learnt in ישיבות Sunderland, Gateshead and Lakewood and then in various חבורות in Manchester. He has taught successfully in numerous מוסדות and currently serves as מנהל in the "מכינה לישיבה" Manchester. In the wider community, he is a highly regarded שיעור. He is uniquely qualified to serve as a role model for the ישיבה.

מגיד שיעור

Rabbi Shlomie Yakir Miller

Rabbi Shlomie Yakir Miller learnt in ישיבה גדולה, Gateshead then in ישיבת אברך. He spent more than 10 years learning individually with בחורים in הר נוף in היכל התורה. He spent more than 10 years learning individually with בחורים in ישיבת שער תורה Manchester where he honed his skills as a מחנך. His unassuming style hides his true value as a ת"ח, deep thinker and kind personality.

מגיד שיעור

I owe R' Yossi tremendous הכרתה טוב for being there for me when I left שיבה to work. He helped me in so many ways and provided the support I needed.
Yehuda Cope (23)

Having left שיבה without much direction, R' Yossi was there for me to guide me through the transition into independent life and employment. He helped me spiritually and also with day-to-day matters.
David B (23)

I wish tremendous success to Rabbi Yossi Goldberg in his new and critical initiative ישיבת בני אדם. R' Yossi has a great love for תורה and deep יראת שמים which I am confident will have a contagious impact on the תלמידים. His caring and empathetic personality are bound to have a vitalising influence on the emotional and spiritual growth of the במורים. Rabbi Chaim Rapoport, ראש כולל נחלת אליעזר, London.

As a במור who left שיבה to go to work, R' Yossi was incredible in helping me with my job and setting up my own business Anonymous (22)

R' Yossi is an individual who is deeply dedicated to תורה and כל ישראל. His vision to provide a שיבה in which במורים will be על whilst entering into the world of פרנסה is a much needed one for our generation. I'm confident that R' Yossi will create a רוח of יראת שמים and אהבת תורה in which the תלמידים will continue to grow both in their learning and in their מדות. He will be an outstanding role model for anyone who is fortunate enough to learn at ישיבת בני אדם.
Rabbi Shaul Rosenblatt (CEO of כולל נחלת אליעזר / RTA)

בית חינוך לבנות פנינים PENINIM PRIMARY SCHOOL

37 Elmcroft Crescent NW11 9TB

Kodesh Headteacher

Required from September 2020 or earlier

Peninim is a school for girls from Yiddish-speaking homes in NW London, with a focus on varemkeit and individualized attention. Thanks to the large and dedicated staff, the school is able to focus on each and every girl, identifying her strengths and ensuring the best possible provision in her formative years. Our pupils love their school, we have a committed staff, and enthusiastic and supportive parents.

We are looking for an inspirational leader and educator who will continue to set high expectations and attainment for our pupils and staff. Our headteacher will understand and share our ethos and values and will provide leadership with a clear strategic vision, empowering and inspiring staff and children to be the best they can be within a nurturing and inclusive environment.

This is an exciting opportunity for a dynamic, ambitious and experienced Headteacher, Deputy Head or Phase Leader who has proven leadership, organizational and interpersonal skills and has the determination and energy to continue to drive the school forward.

If you consider you have these attributes and would add distinction to our school, we are very keen to hear from you. For a Job Description and Person Specification or for any more information please contact the proprietor in full confidence; admin@peninim.co.uk

Closing date for applications is 1 May 2020.

We are committed to safeguarding children and the successful applicant will be required to apply for a disclosure and barring certificate from the DBS.

Stitched Right

Leah was an artist, using needles and thread to create the most magnificent works of art. Sitting at her humble sewing machine, she produced elegant piecework that fetched a hefty price from her admiring customers.

"I would love to buy one of those new embroidery machines," Leah mused aloud. "It would allow me to work much quicker and the stitching would be more perfect."

Her husband was trying to balance the books, but as much as he tugged and twisted, he couldn't get the ends to meet.

"Mmm..." he muttered, adding the columns once again.

"It's a huge investment, but eventually it will pay off," Leah continued. "Just imagine if we could make it to the end of the month without worrying about bounced checks and credit card limits."

That certainly got his attention.

"What's that you said about a new machine?" he asked, pushing aside the frustrating papers. "How much would it cost?"

Leah laughed. "A new machine is way out of our range," she said. "Think along the lines of ten or even twelve thousand dollars."

Yanky sighed. He could think of 10,000 reasons to negate the idea.

"But online we could get it for just $2,000 if we buy it second-hand!" Leah added. "What do you say?"

Yanky swallowed, once and then again, until he could squeeze his voice past the sharp edges of disappointment. "You know we don't do that," he said. "We made ourselves a geder not to shop online."

"So we can ask somebody else to do it for us," Leah pleaded. "Someone who works online or does shopping online..."

Yanky just shook his head. It was hard. It was disappointing. But boundaries are boundaries, and they couldn't allow a new machine to blur those lines.

A couple of days later, Leah was choosing fabric at a supplier's warehouse. She was a favored customer and the seamstress on-site was always very helpful.

"Thanks, Samantha," Leah said as she wrapped up the purchase. "How's everything? Your business is doing well?"

"Just great!" Samantha enthused. "I even bought myself a new embroidery machine to keep up with the growing demand."

Leah's heartbeat quickened. "That's wonderful," she said. "And what did you do with your other machine? Threw it out?"

Samantha laughed. "Who has the heart to throw out such an expensive machine? I can't work on both, obviously, but it's still sitting in my workroom and taking up space."

Leah tried to appear indifferent but she couldn't hide her enthusiasm as she asked, "I could find some space for your old machine. Would you sell it to me for, say, $200 or so?"

It was a daring thing to ask, even bordering on the ridiculous, and Leah held her breath as Samantha smiled indulgently. "You know that's a joke, right?" Samantha laughed. "But the machine is really getting in my way. I guess I'd feel better knowing it was in good hands, instead of just selling it to the highest bidder."

They ironed out some technical details, Leah paid her on the spot, and Samantha surprised herself with her generous offer to deliver the machine at no extra charge.

By the next day, the machine was click-clacking merrily in Leah's workroom, playing a melody that only those in the know could fully appreciate.

DARK TAPESTRY

by Ruthie Pearlman

CHAPTER TWENTY-EIGHT

"Why?"

"Come have a look-see."

Colin followed Peter round the side of the building where a small notice was affixed to a wall.

SmallNet Ltd. has ceased trading. All its financial affairs are in the hands of Smith, Wilson & Co, Official Receivers. For further information, please phone Smith, Wilson & Co at...

They both stared at the notice, as if willing it to say something else. It remained stubbornly the same.

"I don't believe this," Colin spat. He pulled his cell phone out of his pocket and dialed the number on the notice.

"Hello? Ah, can I speak to one of the partners, please? It's Detective Inspector Colin Sommers of Golders Green CID regarding SmallNet. I understand you are the official receivers for that company."

He was put through to Mr. Smith.

"The managing director of SmallNet, a Mr. Renard Lukavac, I believe? I need to find him. Do you have an address for him?"

"Will you excuse me, Detective Inspector, if I sound pedantic, but I have to verify that you are, in fact, the police before I can drop confidentiality."

Colin flushed. In his anger and frustration he had acted precipitously.

"Call the Golders Green police station and ask them to give you Detective Inspector Sommers's cell phone number," he told Smith. "Will that confirm who I am?"

"That will be fine, thank you."

In a moment they were reconnected, and Mr. Smith was willing to divulge information.

"Now, where were we? Ah, right. Renard Lukavac. Yes, he is the registered managing director. However, as you have no doubt discovered, the company is in receivership and we are handling all the company books, trading having ceased."

"They can't have been trading for very long," Colin suggested.

"Not long. You know how these new Internet providers are. Easy come, easy go. Rise and fall like yo-yos. They think all they have to do is buy two dozen modems and a leased line and they're in business. They forget about all the maintenance and service they have to consider, too. When that hits, they cave in and go under. Happens a lot. The big fish will swallow the little fish and become even bigger. That's the cruel facts about commerce, especially with Internet companies, where smaller doesn't seem to be better."

Colin bore this lecture patiently, then asked if Mr. Smith had an address for Renard Lukavac. The address he received was the one they had visited, the one Avi Pincus had traced him to. The one now inhabited by Shoshanah and Jacob Segal.

"That's the only address you have?" Colin asked, heart sinking.

It was.

"Well, I presume you have a phone number, then? You must be in touch with your client."

"Yes. I have a number, but he never answers. He does have a cell phone, though. Usually I leave a message on it, and he calls me right back. Here's the number."

Colin made note of the number.

"Mr. Smith," he said, "Mr. Lukavac is wanted in connection with a very serious crime. It is imperative that we contact him. If you do not have a better way of giving us a contact number than this, we will station a man in your offices until such time as he calls in. We will also monitor all your phone calls in and out of your office."

"What kind of serious crime?"

"Abduction of an eight-year-old boy."

Mr. Smith was suitably upset. "How tragic. I hate it when kids are involved. So messy, so unnecessary."

"All crime is messy and unnecessary. But child abduction really sticks in my craw, Mr. Smith, and I don't intend to let it lie until I find Josh Hardman. Your Mr. Lukavac has led us a merry dance for too long now, and I intend to run him to ground like the sly fox he is and have my hounds tear him to pieces. And I will do anything in my power to achieve that end. Is that clear?"

Peter stared at his partner as he spoke on his cell phone.

"Very clear, Detective Inspector. You may have your men do whatever they need to do in my offices, tap my phones, have someone monitoring all calls. I will cooperate fully with you on this investigation. I had no idea we were dealing with a child abductor, only a bankrupt Internet businessman."

"He probably set up the ISP specifically so he could send untraceable e-mails," Colin told him, "then closed down once the purpose had been served."

"I cannot imagine his motives," Mr. Smith told Colin.

"As yet we have no clear idea either. Anyway, thank you for cooperating. I will get things moving as fast as I can."

Colin took down the receivers' address and hung up. The connection broken, the two policemen looked at each other.

"I can't imagine any motive strong enough to want to abduct someone's only child," Peter said. "No matter how badly hurt I am by someone else, I wouldn't exact that kind of revenge."

"Nor can I imagine it," Colin said, "but we are dealing with a criminal mind here, not a mind like yours and mine. In Shake's warped, twisted brain, he thinks he is behaving perfectly logically. Criminals always justify their crimes to themselves; that's how they live with it. Whatever grievance, real or imagined, was done to Shake, he has worked it out that it deserves the kid being taken. He will never understand why it is wrong."

"Is this the Shake you remembered?"

"I hardly knew the bloke, but he certainly was odd," Colin replied. "Who can tell. I was a kid. I was only sixteen when I knew Shake." He sighed. "Well, not much point in hanging around here. Let's get that monitoring team set up at Smith and Wilson and a phone tap. Hopefully Shake will dial in and then we'll catch him. Or at least get a handle on him."

The two men disconsolately returned to their car. The Fox seemed always one step ahead. He seemed to have thought of every move they were going to make just before they made it. Fox by name and fox by nature, Colin thought as they drove despondently back to Golders Green.

Would they ever catch him? Would they ever find Josh Hardman?

CHAPTER TWENTY-NINE

Don Hardman sat in his office, unable to work. His face had grown thinner, more gaunt and haggard in the past ten days since Josh had been missing, and the strain was taking its toll. His hair, formerly so thick and dark and lustrous, was dull, lifeless, and dry, and he had found some gray hairs amid the dark. He was only in his early thirties, and right now he looked like an old man.

He had possibly lost his son forever. He had to come to terms with that now. The police seemed to be coming up against one brick wall after another. The Fox, whoever that was, was just too smart for them.

But whatever the anguish of losing his only child was, it was exacerbated by the double anguish of possibly losing his wife.

Ilana was a stranger to him these days. She seemed to live in a world of her own, in a plastic bubble where he couldn't reach her. Maybe this was her way of coping — turning into an ice queen and living on a frozen island where no one could touch her.

Don still felt pain. Don still cried. Don wanted his son back, but, even more, he wanted his wife back.

Mary Nolan brought him a cup of tea. "Please, Mr. Hardman, don't be like this. We all hate to see you like this."

He accepted the tea and tried to smile. "Sorry, Mary, I'll try not to be too despondent. How about doing some dictation?"

"Gladly," the faithful secretary said with a smile. "I'll get my book."

Before he could start dictating, the phone rang. Mary picked it up. From her expression as she listened, Don could tell that something was wrong. He sat up, heart pounding.

"Josh?"

She covered the mouthpiece. "No, not Josh. But I think you should listen to this man."

Don grabbed the phone. "Don Hardman here. Who is this?"

"Hi, there, Don." A soft, smooth, mid-Atlantic accent. "Remember me?"

"Should I?" But even as he said the words, doors were unlocking, memories beginning to trickle, the trickle becoming a flood.

"Well, I am flattered. After all the good times we had back home in Iowa, you've forgotten all about me. How charming."

"I haven't forgotten you, Gabriel. How could I?" The voice on the other end laughed delightedly.

"Your childhood tormentor, huh? Well, you sure got your revenge on me, didn't you?"

"Did I?"

"Yeah. Sure you did. You had a rich and powerful daddy, and you were religious. I was bothering you, making you doubt what you believed in. Why? Because my arguments made sense. So you told Daddy all about it, and Daddy saw to it that my father lost his job and all he had, including his name, and had to leave the country in disgrace."

"It wasn't like that, Gabriel, and you know it."

"Oh, wasn't it? I think it was, Don Hardman."

"No, I told my father about it because I needed his spiritual guidance to help me when you kept messing around with my head. It wasn't his fault or mine that your father was embezzling company funds. Your father was a crook, and what I told my dad had nothing to do with it. Dad found out about the missing funds totally independently from what I told him about you messing with my head."

Gabriel snorted. "Your daddy Big Boss, my daddy little man. The little man always loses, doesn't he, Don?"

"If he's a crook, sure he does. And rightly so."

Gabriel didn't seem to be listening. "What you told your father ended up with us having to leave the country in disgrace and coming to England like paupers, looking for anonymity and a new start. I vowed then that I would get my revenge on you, and I kept my word."

Don stopped. "What?"

Gabriel laughed. "Missing Josh, are you?" A snicker.

Don gasped. "You're the Fox?"

"But of course. I always said I'd get my revenge for the way you ruined my family. I've waited a long time for this. And I can tell you now, it's very, very satisfying."

"Gabriel. I didn't ruin your family. Your father did it all by himself by embezzling company funds over a long period. I didn't know he was doing that. How could I? I was only a child. I only knew that you were making my life a misery by tormenting me about being frum. So I told my dad and asked if he could do anything about it. He said he'd speak to the school principal. That was all. There is no connection between that and the fact that your dad chose to leave the country because of fraud. Please believe me." Don paused. "Where is your father now, by the way?"

"He committed suicide four years ago when he realized he would never escape his past. Jumped off a bridge in Devon."

"I'm really sorry to hear that," Don said sincerely, "but it has nothing at all to do with me and what happened between us, please believe me."

Gabriel let out a high-pitched, maniacal laugh. "What garbage you do talk, Don Hardman. Hahahahahaha!"

At that moment, Don was certain that he was dealing with a madman. Gabriel was totally insane.
