Lifepoint

Independent Health Insurance Specialists

Client Testimonial

"My experience with Lifepoint Healthcare was out of this world. For quite a few years I have been trying to lower my healthcare premiums.

Whatever I tried didn't work. If I did get a cheaper policy, there were always technical stipulations or there would be exclusions etc.

I turned to Lifepoint & somehow they negotiated with my present provider a deal that landed me paying almost half of what I was paying.

It was mind-blowing.

Exactly the same policy but half the price.

I am so grateful & happy."

EXPERIENCED GRADUATE OF

DARK TAPESTRY

by Ruthie Pearlman

CHAPTER FIFTEEN

"I've taken the liberty," Leora said from the back seat as the car neared North West London, "of renting some equipment."

"What kind of equipment?" asked Colin.

"A computer, compound microscope, comparison 'scope, fuming frames, a polarized light microscope. And I bought some other stuff — latex gloves, goggles, tweezers, that sort of thing."

"We do have computers in Golders Green," Peter said. "We aren't still in the Dark Ages here."

She shot him an arch look. "I'm sure you have, but this computer is specialized. It hooks up to the microscope and gives me an instant on-screen image of what the slides show in whatever magnification I need."

"Oh, right," Peter said. He retreated into embarrassed silence.

Leora laughed at the anxious look on Colin's face. "Don't worry, Detective Inspector Sommers. I've okayed the expenses with your CID. They're having the stuff sent over to your offices first thing tomorrow morning. I presume I'll have an office to myself there?"

Peter said no and Colin said yes simultaneously. Colin shot Peter a dark look and said, "It's okay. Peter will doss down in my office and you can have his. Can't she, Peter?"

"Sure, any time," Peter said in response to a sharp sideways elbow in the ribs from Colin. Leora beamed at Peter. "You British are just too kind. Thanks so much."

Peter leaned over to Colin. "You could have asked me first," he hissed.

Colin grinned. "We'll both be squashed, so we'll suffer together for the little lady."

"Such cute houses!" Leora exclaimed as she gazed out of the window at the city. "I hope I'm staying in one just as cute."

"The Hardmans are putting you up," said Peter. "They have plenty of room to spare, and you'll be on the spot for surveying the crime scene. I thought maybe they wouldn't have the head for visitors, but Mrs. Hardman seemed very keen to have you stay. I think it will be a comfort to her to have someone involved in finding her son under her roof. And Mr. Hardman is American, so you'll feel more at home. But please, remember her fragile state."

"What do you take me for?" Leora said, miffed. "I know how to behave, Sergeant White."

"Have you not been to England before, Miss Jakober?" Colin asked.

"Never. Always wanted to come visit. So when I heard about poor little Josh it was just too good a chance to miss."

The two men exchanged a glance.

"If you will permit me, miss, this isn't a tourist trip, and I do hope you won't regard it as such. This child has been missing for over five days now, and we are no nearer solving the crime."

"You are nearer," Leora assured him. "You just don't know it yet. You have lots of clues, lots of evidence, lots of pointers. You just have to be able to read them. You just have to have the right reading glasses on to make everything come clear as day."

"And you're the ophthalmologist?"

Leora laughed. "No, I'm the reading glasses."

Avi worked fast, silent as mist, through the computer systems he was being paid to fix. Partly software, partly wiring, he had done what he was paid to do before 2 A.M. He took a brief rest, washed, and ate his sandwiches and drank some strong black coffee. His whole body shrieked for sleep, but he couldn't stop now.

Once he had eaten and drunk, he sat back at a terminal and started to look for the Fox. As yet he wasn't sure how he was going to find him, but he had a hunch that in SloppyNet's offices, things hadn't been too tidy and things could have been left visible.

He did several searches for log files, which record conversations either by phone or Internet, on each machine. Nothing. He moved from machine to machine, looking at the overhead clock. His sight was beginning to go. He could see red and green stars dancing in front of his eyes, and he kept having to blink to clear his vision. He actually fell asleep sitting up twice, waking up after two minutes groggy and disoriented.

When he found it, he almost missed it. He was swaying in his seat, dangerously close to falling onto the floor and passing out. The whole world was shimmering in and out of focus. And there it was. A hundred megabytes of log files. He was instantly awake and alert, all sleep banished from his body, every cell vigilant and attentive. Now all he had to do was scroll through them until he found what he was looking for. And he had all night.

He would need it.

Leora Jakober entered the Hardman home. Ilana and Don were there to greet her together, standing close, like a buffer against the world. Leora thought them a very good-looking couple, and despite the stress they were under they both looked well groomed and tidy. Ilana's skin was smooth and clear, her eyes liquid and soft, her smile genuine.

"Welcome to our home," she told Leora, holding out her hand in greeting. "We are so grateful that you came all the way from New York to help us find our son."

The innocent gratitude in her eyes was so moving, so touching, that for the first time since she'd heard about Josh in New York, Leora felt the real tragedy of this mission. Before it had been just a job. Suddenly it had become more personal. Without knowing why she did it, Leora held out her arms to the other woman. Instinctively Ilana went into her arms, and the two women hugged like old friends and wept. Ilana felt a kinship with this stranger that she had not felt in a long time. It was as if all her old friends were of no relevance at this time of stress and worry, but this woman alone could share her torment.

"Come on, I'll show you to your room," Ilana said. "And when you've freshened up, maybe you'd like something to eat and drink?"

"Thank you, I ate on the plane, but I'd love a hot chocolate and some toast, please," said Leora with typical candor.

She followed the older woman upstairs and noticed how she skirted widely past a closed room on the right at the top of the stairs.

"Josh's?"

Ilana nodded. "We keep it locked because of the evidence. We've been told not to touch anything."

"Good. I'll want to look at it in the morning if that's okay. Hopefully the stuff I rented will have arrived by then."

Leora was shown into a comfortable double guest room with a bathroom en suite.

"This is great! My own facilities," she exclaimed.

"We aren't as short of space as most Golders Green families," Ilana replied smoothly.

"Well, thank you very much." Leora put her stuff on the bed. "I think I'll take a shower, then I'll come down for that hot chocolate and toast."

"Certainly," Ilana said and left her.
