PURIM 2019

פורים תשע"ט

מודעה ואזהרה

With Purim only a few days away we would like to remind everyone of a few important points that will ensure that you, your families and the whole קהילה remain safe during this time, whilst still being able to enjoy the "פורים spirit"

Drink Drive

Remember there is no minimum amount one can drink without being affected by alcohol - each person reacts differently to alcohol. Although there is a מצוה of לא תעמוד על דם רעך this must not be in contravention of דיןא דמלכותא and נשמרתם מאד לנפשותיכם . Therefore don't drink and drive!

Children

- Children will be pre-occupied with their costumes and the מצות היום, therefore they may not be conscious of the סכנה the street brings.
- Parents should emphasise to their children about the dangers of the road, and of maintaining road safety awareness at all times.
- Parents should also be aware of the סכנה, and resulting consequences of under age drinking.
- It is imperative to know the whereabouts of your children at all times.
- If your children are shpieling, please ensure they are accompanied by a sensible (sober) adult, especially if they are carrying sums of money.
- If your child's costume includes an imitation firearm / weapon, please ensure this does not look realistic as armed police will be patrolling the area.

Deter Burglary

Do not leave משלוח מנות outside the front door of a house if the occupants are not in. Doing so leaves a clear message to potential criminals that no one is home.

Barnet Police are putting on extra reassurance patrols throughout Purim for the safety and security of the community. Police will not take Purim into consideration and will strictly enforce the law.

DARK TAPESTRY

by Ruthie Pearlman

Chapter Ten cont.

"I'll do my best. I can't promise more than that."

"So should I send you those e-mails?"

"If you e-mail them to me, no doubt whoever intercepted the last one will intercept these, too. He's on guard now."

"So what do you suggest?"

"Print them out and fax them to me. I'll tell you when and where, and I'll be waiting for it by the fax machine. I think that should be pretty fail-safe."

"Okay, I'll do that."

They disconnected after Baruch wrote down the number and time he should fax the e-mails over. He called Pinny right away and relayed the news. Pinny was amazed, to say the least.

"Seems like it's quite an opponent we're up against," he said. "Someone who can send untraceable e-mails and who can intercept and change them. I had no idea such things were possible."

"We need some siyatta diShamaya," Baruch said.

"And a good hacker as His tool," said Pinny. Even over the phone Baruch could hear he was smiling.

"What about the search, then?" Pinny went on.

Baruch coughed. "Seems it's been temporarily suspended," he said, hoping that didn't show too much loss of face.

"That copper's changed his mind, then?" Pinny asked astutely.

"Seems so. For now, anyway. I'm sure he'll soon see how much help we can be. Now I have to go send this fax to Avi. Talk to you later."

The fax safely received, Avi sat looking at it for a long time. His heart thumping, he sat at his computer. A half-hour later, he phoned Baruch Weiss.

"Have you got a spare bed?" Avi said without preamble.

"Sure, why?"

"Make it ready. I'm coming back to England. On my own."

Ilana and Don were talking about their missing son.

"When we are sick," Don said to her gently, "we go to a specialist."

"Yes, Don," she said.

"And when we need anything in our home, or for any purpose, we always look for the top man."

"True," she agreed.

"Now our most precious commodity, our only son, is missing," he went on.

"But the police are on it. Detective Inspector Sommers seems very good." Ilana's voice rose in panic.

"I'm sure he knows his job, and he is doing the best he can under the circumstances, Ilana. But it's not his child who's missing. Maybe we should call in a specialist of our own."

"I don't know of any specialists in finding lost sons."

"I might just know someone, though," he said.

"Let me make a call to New York and speak to a specialist I just happen to know."

and blinked in the bright afternoon sun. She reached in her bag and put on sunglasses. She was carrying a briefcase; she had been at work in Manhattan. Quickly she crossed the street and started walking up Avenue J toward home. Her shoulder-length auburn hair glistened like burnished copper in the sun, and she wore an obviously modest but smart city suit. She was Leora Jakober, twenty-five years old, the youngest criminologist the New York Police Department employed.

Leora Jakober was observant, but she had not always been so. Brought up in midtown Manhattan, only daughter to highflying professional parents, she had not known a life other than the lonely latchkey existence of a child whose parents were never home. At school, too, all her friends' parents worked full-time. They never knew what it was like to have a mommy at home baking brownies when they returned from school or someone to listen to their moaning against the unfair teacher. Girls like Leora Jakober and her peers had their own house keys and knew where the microwave dinners were kept in the freezer, because Mom and Dad weren't going to be home much before nine-thirty, often much later.

Leora had always been fascinated by anything to do with the police. Her peers had read novels and magazines. Leora had read police manuals and lengthy tracts on crime and forensic science. She had hung around police departments, keeping a low profile, but impressing even the hardest-nosed city cop with her brain and determination to learn. She managed to always be around when there was action without being under everyone's feet.

Her parents were not surprised when she told them she wanted to study criminology. Though they did not think it an appropriate occupation for a woman, they were too politically correct to say so to their highly motivated daughter. Since they were wealthy and had no other children, they sent her to the University of South Florida at Tampa, where she graduated magna cum laude in criminology in two years. Once she qualified, she got a position with the NYPD and quickly became indispensable, making detective in the minimum possible time. Her insight into the criminal mind and her sharp observation of evidence soon won her a place as a criminologist for the department. Official or unofficial, she was the one they sought out when trace evidence needed analyzing. With the aid of the latest technology she was able to spot things others missed.

Working with all ethnic groups and cultures, Leora found herself drawn to her Jewish roots despite her parents' ignorance and cynicism. She began attending a ba'al teshuvah program and found the answers to many doubts and questions. She never quite reached chareidi level, but she was strongly religious, observed Shabbos and kashrus, and traded her jeans and combat pants for elegant city suits or soft skirts and sweaters. The crossroad was reached when her career came into question. Could an observant Jewess still continue to be a police detective? What about Shabbos and festivals? By this time Leora Jakober was indispensable to her employers, and they were willing to have her on almost any terms. And so, reluctantly, the rav in charge of the ba'al teshuvah program agreed to her continuing in her chosen vocation.
