I owe a tremendous amount of thanks to Miriam for being there to help me in so many different ways. She has a tremendous amount of knowledge and she has helped me to grow me. It really changed my life. Her many life experience makes it obvious that what she teaches is true and tested.
S.G. Frankel (+9722) 537-4515 (Israel)

I would not be the confident mother I am today if not for Mrs Meiselman's fabulous course... I started 7 years ago and am still in touch whenever I need guidance. She is the best!!

Professional Counsellor Training

Do people often approach you for help?

Do you want to support others in the kehilloh?

Come and train as a qualified counsellor in a hemishe environment!

CPPD Counselling School offers the only BACP accredited training exclusively for charedi students in the UK.

Following the success of previous training, we are again running separate counselling training courses for men and women

Part-time Women's Certificate in Humanistic Integrative Counselling

Part-time Women's Diploma in Humanistic Integrative Counselling

Part-time Men's Certificate in Humanistic Integrative Counselling

Courses begin February 2020

Following this training you can apply for the Advanced Diploma course.
Upon successful completion you will qualify as a counsellor, eligible for BACP accreditation.

Your Questions Answered

Q: We are not sure what to do. Our son is struggling academically and needs to go out of the class for help but refuses to go and is probably embarrassed. How can we get him the help he needs?

A: ר' Yisroel Rand שליט"א, Kodesh SENCo - תורה תמימה

Answer: Most children are naturally happy to receive the undivided attention from the SENCo department. It is unusual for a child to feel embarrassed, though there may be other significant reasons to have caused this - such as a previous negative experience or perhaps the way the parents or teacher presented it to them. It is therefore recommended to prepare the child, explaining clearly what will be done in a positive way, focussing on the benefits and the goal. An open and validating conversation is very helpful and beneficial for both the parents and the child in deciding the best way forward.

ר' Yoel Y. Weiss שליט"א, SENCo - ת"ת באבוב

Answer: It is important to bear in mind that every child has his or her unique difficulties and challenges. I would however encourage parents/teachers to discuss with their child/student their difficulties and potential support in a sensitive and empathetic manner prior to sending them out for help. Having an open discussion about a transition or something new with one's child mitigates the anxiety and resistance. Unfortunately I have found that sometimes parents find it difficult to discuss these sort of matters.

A child cannot be forced to learn or participate; it can cause the child to feel more distress and anxiety thus reinforcing their resistance to any support.

ר' Zalman Leib Frenkel שליט"א, SENCo and Psychotherapist סקווירא – תולדות יעקב יוסף

Answer: It is rare that a young child would be unwilling to go to the SENCo as it is usually an enjoyable learning experience as opposed to regular classroom learning. Most pupils want the help and look forward to coming. It is more likely that the child has picked up on his parent's embarrassment and fears and therefore rejects the idea as well. It is important that parents take into consideration that the child may be more embarrassed later on when he cannot keep up with his peers. If however the child's embarrassment is real then it may be worthwhile to accommodate him so that he meets with the SENCo at the end of school or before school starts or any other time that he prefers. Furthermore I think it is imperative to assess the reason for the child's reluctance as sometimes the child's emotional state may take precedence over his academics.

Please note that these answers are general guidelines. Each individual should consult with their Rov or Moreh Derech.

We are seeking to appoint an outstanding English Teacher to teach up to and including GCSE level.
The successful applicant will be able to teach with skill and confidence, and be able to inspire, challenge and support our pupils.

The successful candidate will:

- Have a passion for English language and literature evident in their day to day teaching.
- Show evidence of being an outstanding teacher in the classroom.
- Want to make a real difference to the lives of all young people.

The post carries a highly competitive salary. It also benefits from a reduced workload and extremely generous non-contact time.

To request an application form, or if you would like to talk informally to the Headteacher to find out more about the position, please call 020 8458 1074 or e-mail office@ttts.org.uk

TTTS is committed to safeguarding and promoting the safety and welfare of children. The successful applicant will be subject to an Enhanced Level DBS check.

DARK TAPESTRY

by Ruthie Pearlman

"He only sent two. No more," Ilana mused. "I wonder why. Maybe he has no more messages to send us. Maybe he knew we were on his trail and decided to take drastic steps." Her voice rose in panic.

"No, no. Don't think like that," Leora soothed.

"But if he's the Internet Fox, as he says he is, then he should use the Net, shouldn't he?"

"It's only a few days since the last e-mail. Maybe he's on the run with Josh and has no access to a computer," Leora said reassuringly, though she herself had wondered at the lack of e-mails. Since the Fox had showed himself to be comfortable with a computer, it didn't make sense that he had stopped using this medium. Unless...

Unless he knew he was being tracked. Which would achieve exactly what Colin didn't want to achieve — to drive him underground, to scare him away. Scare him to where no one would be able to find him. Leora closed her eyes for a moment and sent up a silent prayer that the Fox was still somewhere close by.

After breakfast, Ilana went into Don's study while Leora cleared up the breakfast dishes. She let out a cry, which brought Leora running.

"I don't believe it!" She was pointing at the screen with a shaking finger. Leora looked.

"It's from him! The Fox! I don't believe it! What a coincidence!"

"Sure is," Leora said, breathing an inward sigh of relief and sending up a prayer of thanks. Wow, I must be better than I thought if You answered my prayers so fast!

The e-mail read:

When devils will the blackest sins put on,

They do suggest at first with heavenly shows.

The Internet Fox

"What does it mean?" Ilana said, her voice rising dangerously out of control.

Leora read it again. "To me it sounds as if the Fox feels threatened. Print it out, Ilana. I'd better call Colin."

Within ten minutes Colin was staring at the screen alongside Ilana and Leora. "There's something very familiar about the style of the writing," he said, rubbing his chin. "I can't place it. Hang on a second." From his inside jacket pocket he withdrew a copy of the book he'd been reading last night.

"A paperback novel? Oh, come on," Ilana said derisively.

"No, not the novel. Look. I found this slip of paper inside it." He held out the sheet with the poem.

There was a brief silence while they all read it.

"It's not that similar," Leora said at last.

"No," Ilana agreed, "but there is something..."

Colin said, "The book belongs to Cindy Wallis. It's just too much of a coincidence."

"You think the person who wrote the letter to Cindy and the person who wrote this e-mail are one and the same?" Ilana asked.

"I think so. I'm not sure. I'd have to find an expert. Someone literary."

"Well, at least one thing's for sure. He's still sending e-mails, which is a good sign," Leora interjected.

"It means he still feels confident that no one can trace them," agreed Colin, "though the content of this one seems to hint that he feels threatened."

"We don't want him to feel threatened. Then he'll be much harder to trace," Leora said worriedly.

Colin looked at the two lines of text. "I think this isn't composed by him. I don't think he is a writer. He is using someone else's work. Does anyone recognize it?"

They all shook their heads. "It sounds very classic, but I must confess, the classics never interested me that much; I always found them boring," Ilana said.

Leora nodded her agreement. "I've always preferred modern writers," she said. "In any case, you know what this could mean, don't you?" Leora said slowly, and they both looked at her. "It means Cindy and the Fox may know each other, could even be working together on this kidnaping."

"Are you seriously suggesting that Cindy's grievance against Don for sacking her was enough to make her commit this crime?" Ilana said incredulously. "For heaven's sake, she must be twisted if firing her for using chat rooms and playing games on-line during working hours would make her angry enough to kidnap a child."

"And use an accomplice like the Fox to carry it out," agreed Leora. "You're right. It doesn't make sense. It's taking a sledgehammer to crack a peanut."

"I suppose if she's got a screw loose she could be capable of anything for the slightest provocation," Colin said, mostly to himself.

"I knew Cindy," Ilana said. "She was an intelligent girl, computer literate. She was just lazy and wanted to have fun, not work. I can't imagine her being provoked enough to want to do this. She'd more likely just find some other job where she wasn't watched too closely and have fun there instead."

"Hmm. Maybe we can find out from Karen Whitestone if Cindy had a boyfriend, and if so who. Come on, gang, we have work to do! First to the Fox's address, then back to Edgware to speak to Karen Whitestone. We could speak to her from the cell phone on the way. Maybe she has more news about Cindy's whereabouts."

"I want to come with you," Ilana said suddenly. "Don't leave me here alone, please."

They looked at her with compassion.

"We're doing police work, Ilana," Leora said at last, putting her arm round the older woman. "Couldn't you get your mother or a friend to come and be with you?"

Ilana visibly sagged, like a rag doll from which someone had removed half the stuffing. "No, it's okay." She looked at the wall clock. "Don will be home from the kollel soon. Maybe we'll go out for a while. It's a lovely spring day."

Her words were positive and upbeat, but her tone and body language gave a whole different message. Leora felt terrible, but taking Ilana along on today's trip would set a very worrying and impractical precedent.

"I'll tell you what," Colin said. "We'll pass the kollel on our way out and drop in and tell Don to come home a bit earlier. How's that?"

Another glance at the wall clock. "I don't want to cut his learning short. He doesn't get much chance during the week. Work is always in the way. I'll walk to the kollel and pick up some groceries on the way. By the time I finish my food shopping, he'll be ready to leave." She beamed at them both. "There! See? I'm sorted! Off you go!"

"We'll go if you go, too," Leora said firmly. Ilana went and got her shoulder bag and sunglasses. She wouldn't need a jacket; the weather was warm. She joined them outside the house and locked up carefully.

"Want a lift?" Colin asked politely. He didn't actually want her to accept, as once she was in the car, he had a feeling she'd be a job and a half to get out again. Anyhow, he had to pick up Peter on the way.

"No, no, I want to walk," Ilana replied on cue. "It's a glorious morning, the flowers in my neighbors' gardens need my inspection as I walk up the road, and there's plenty of time to get my shopping done before I pick up Don."
