MISHNAH ON THE GO!

Do you have a spare moment where you could learn something but do not have a book at hand (e.g. walking, traveling between two places, waiting for something or someone etc).

Grab a quick Mitzvah!

A new service is being offered to the community!

There are two options:

- Mishna a day with a short thought (The text of a Mishna is sent via WhatsApp with a short voice message explanation. (The explanation of the Mishna is based on the Artscroll elucidated addition). A short (unconnected) thought for the day is also sent.
- Once a week explanation of a Mishna from the weekly chapter of Pirkei Avos(t) (a text of the Mishna is sent via WhatsApp and a short voice message explanation is given on the simple level and another on a deeper level).

It should be noted that learning Mishna, when learnt in the merit of someone who has passed away is a great benefit for their soul.

Please send a WhatsApp message to 07886 037191 and indicate which option you wish to receive: a daily Mishna or a weekly one from Pirkei Avos (or both).

Convenient, Quick, To The Point and A Mitzvah!

Rabbi Yitzchok Kaye will be explaining the Mishna.

HARAV BENYOMIN CARLEBACH
Yeshiva Mir Yerushalayim

מיון קרליבך
ידידות

ר"ח סיון תש"פ

Dear Talmidim, Friends and Tomchei Torah of The Mir,

We turn to you, at this crucial time with an urgent plea.

It is over 3 years since our last fundraising event. We are about to embark on a fundraising matching campaign, the success of which is absolutely vital for the continued existence and success of the Mir Yeshiva.

Klal Yisroel is at present still in shock and turmoil, as the pandemic of corona is unfortunately not yet over. We are well aware of the financial aspect of this "Eis Tzoro", alongside the pains of the "Availim" and the "Cholim" and their families and the difficult changes in our daily routine that the "heq" has brought upon us.

We are likewise aware of the sensitiveness of campaigns and fundraising at present.

In recognition of all the above, we turn to you, especially now, כי הם חיים וארץ, the heartbeat of Klal Yisroel and of the world.

The needs of the Mir Yeshiva today are as great as ever. The vast majority of our budget are the entire staff and Koliel. These expenses do not change at all when the Yeshiva operates "by technology" and remote control.

Our sources of income at present have been cut short by the instability of the Israeli Government (they're still not stable) and the shortfall in tuition and fundraising worldwide.

עץ חיים הוא למחיתם בה – The Torah sustains life, to those who understand that they "hold onto the Torah for dear life".

Please take part generously in our campaign, and may Hashem repay you "shefa tov" in every aspect of your lives.

LOOMING DANGER!

Until today we were able to maintain stability as most local Goyim work in various tourism endeavors serving the Yidden coming to the Ukraine – now unemployment pushes them to persecution

They defile the Kevorim and try to take over our sacred places!

DARK TAPESTRY

by Ruthie Pearlman

CHAPTER THIRTY-TWO

"The Globe Theater," she breathed.

They read on, breathless.

The original Globe opened in 1599, burned down in 1613, was immediately rebuilt. It was closed in 1642 and torn down in 1644. Now, two hundred yards from its original site, after almost four hundred years, Shakespeare's Globe has been opened to the public again: the rebuilt playhouse was officially inaugurated by Her Majesty the Queen on Thursday, 12 June 1997. Its opening season ran from 29 June to 21 September 1997, and every summer it now offers performances of plays by Shakespeare and his contemporaries on the type of stage they were written for, many in authentic costumes.

"He has him there. I know it."

"There's a map," Leora said. And there was. "The wonders of the Internet," she commented.

"Okay. I'm going to get a squad ready. Snipers. The lot. We aren't taking any chances with this joker. Come on."

Colin told Peter to inform the Hardmans of developments. Don wanted to come along, even though Ilana was too sedated to be coherent, but he was firmly told to stay away.

"The man is dangerous, Mr. Hardman," Colin told him. "We'll be in constant touch. I will let you know by cell phone what is happening. But it would be foolhardy for you to come along. He has already murdered at least once, probably twice."

"Twice? Who? I mean besides Cindy Wallis."

"Seems his father's death might not have been a suicide."

"Oy vey."

"You stay home and look after Mrs. Hardman."

"Yes, okay. But please keep us informed."

"I will," Colin promised. He broke the connection and began making preparations to sneak into the Globe Theater. He had never been there in his life, despite being a born-and-bred Londoner. This was not unusual; many locals hadn't even seen the most popular London sights, being too wrapped up in their own lives.

The Globe looks, feels, and sounds different from other London theaters. The theater is a circular, open-air structure. The three covered galleries seat a thousand people, and six or seven hundred people stand in the yard around the stage. This makes it the third largest theater auditorium in London, yet it comes over primarily as intimate. The stage is roofed. Performances used to take place in daylight. There is little or no scenery; drapes, hangings, and furniture adorn the stage and set the scene. Music and sound effects (a cannon can be fired or bells sounded in the attic) are live and part of the performance.

Since the last performance began at 7:30 P.M., Colin knew that by ten-thirty the theater would be empty and dark. That's when he chose to make his stealthy appearance there and look for Josh.

"I'm coming with you," Leora said firmly. "Wild horses couldn't keep me away."

"And I always avoid clichés like the plague," Colin deadpanned.

Leora laughed aloud. It was good to find things to laugh about, even at moments of high tension like these. It made them feel that they were still alive, that normal red blood coursed through their veins and there was life despite Josh. Or was that after Josh? Leora sent up a small, shivery prayer.

Then there was the matter of Colin's chosen outfit for the night's activities. He was wearing dark sweats, black sneakers, and a black baseball cap.

"Colin, you look like a cat burglar," Leora remarked.

"Very amusing, I'm sure," Colin said, but a corner of his mouth twitched.

"If you're hoping to look inconspicuous..." Leora was suddenly seized by giggles and couldn't stop.

"You'll have to dress in dark clothes, too," he said.

"We'll stop at your flat on the way. I'll wait in the car while you change."

"What about my hair? It's far too bright, and I don't own any hats." Colin rummaged in a drawer and brought out a balaclava helmet knitted in black wool. "You have to be kidding," she said, holding the knitted hat with its face piece revealing only her eyes and mouth. "I'll look like an IRA terrorist."

"That's an order," Colin bossed. "Like you said, your red hair will stand out a mile in the dimmest lamplight."

She laughed and pulled the knitted helmet over her head and face. "Stand out a mile? I've heard about big hair, but this is ridiculous!"

Colin grinned and left her to go brief the squad.

At the Hardmans', Ilana came out of her drug-induced stupor and became very restless. She questioned Don over and over about what would happen that night, but Don could not answer, for he did not know himself. He began to pace, his palms clammy, his heart pounding uncomfortably. Ilana, in turn, was pale and trembling.

"Come into the garden with me for a little walk, Ilana," Don suggested. "It's cool and fresh out there." Outside, it was dark and quiet, with hardly any noises from the nearby main road. Golders Green was not downtown London; there was little or no night life here, just a few pubs that closed at eleven, some kosher pizza parlors, coffee houses, and grocery stores, all of which were now closed. A few die-hards were abroad, walking. Ilana, shivering like a kitten in the rain, stood in her garden, listening to the quiet of the night. He, too, was very afraid, but dared not show it; his wife needed a rock, not a slender sapling threatening to bend and snap.

"Oh, Don," she murmured as they walked around the garden. "Oh, Don, I'm so scared."

He was longing to say, "Me too, hon," but he could not, for her sake. He just said, "Shh, have bitachon, have faith. Hashem is watching over us. Can't you feel it?"

She breathed in the sweetness of a thousand night flowers, lilacs and night stock and roses. She breathed in a thousand people's prayers and wishes and dreams. She breathed in all the longing of every mother for her child since Chavah in the Garden of Eden when her sons had destroyed each other. She breathed in the yearning of Sarah for a child and her joy when she had Yitzchak. She breathed in the craving of Rachel for sons when her sister gave birth to six. She breathed in the sisterhood of every woman in her holy ancestry who had longed for children, some of whom had been cruelly robbed of them before seeing them become men and women. Would she ever see Josh at his bar mitzvah, in a new suit and hat, or see Don lead him under his chuppah to some young, pale girl with doe-dark eyes and a ready smile? Her thoughts projected forward, floating like silver streamers, carrying her like winged angels on their backs.

"I am so restless. I can't imagine what is happening. I don't want to think..."

"You can do it. Let's sit on the patio wall and say some tehillim together. Then we can talk about all the nice things we remember about Josh."

Ilana visibly relaxed as first they prayed together, drawing strength from each other, and after, as they talked in low voices, remembering his babyhood, his first attempts at crawling, his first shaky steps on his first birthday...

"Do you remember when he started tearing up your books, the ones on low shelves, Don?"

"Yes, the little brat. How annoyed I was, finding him standing there, ripping my siddurim and other books apart. He was all of fifteen months and knew no better, but just gave me this sweet, innocent smile. How could I get angry at him when he looked at me like that? All dark curly hair and bright blue eyes with those long curly lashes women would die for."

"Don't say die for, Don," Ilana said. "Please, don't say die for."
