Quality At Your Grasp.

היטצ'ר

Genesis Merlot 2016

Bright coloured with an aroma of plum and cherry, a soft texture with rounded finish.

היטצ'ר

Genesis Cabernet Sauvignon 2016

Ruby red with a red fruit aroma, a full flavour and a clean finish.

Virtuoso Rose 2017

Rich aromas of citrus and red grapefruit, well balanced, full of life and freshness.

היטצ'ר

Virtuoso Cabernet Sauvignon 2016

Deep red colour with aromas of blackberries & blackcurrant. The wine has herbaceous notes with hints of coffee & mocha.

היטצ'ר

Virtuoso Merlot 2016

Rustic red coloured with aromas of ripe plum, cherries and blackberries. The wine has soft tannins and full satisfying finish.

Virtuoso Chardonnay 2017

Full aromas of blossoms, apricot, vanilla and completed with bright acidity and a long mouth coating finish.

היטצ'ר

Lyrica GSM 2016

Classic Mediterranean blend made from Grenache, Syrah and Mourvedre. Bright coloured, very fruity with smooth & long finish, aromas of blackberries, chocolate and spices will be noted.

היטצ'ר

Lyrica Meritage 2016

Unique blend made of Cabernet Sauvignon, Merlot, Petit Verdot and Cabernet Franc. Has a bright ripe fruit and intense dark fruit aromas and reminiscent of raspberries, blackberries & woody notes.

Auteur Cabernet Sauvignon 2013

DARK TAPESTRY

by Ruthie Pearlman

"He's that one over there." She pointed at a small skinny boy on a red bike, who seemed to be leading a couple of kids around the block. He was shouting orders at them, and they were happy to comply. "Do you want to talk to him?"

"Maybe later, if that's all right. I need to talk to Moishie Brandt first."

"Oh, yes. Moishie is Josh's best friend. They tell each other everything."

Colin nodded. "That's what I'm hoping. See you soon."

He walked off down the road toward the Brandts' house. Passing the boy on the red bike, he ruffled his hair, causing him to look up sharply with a puzzled look.

"Don't worry, son. I'm only a copper. Talk to you soon."

"A policeman?" the boy said, impressed. "Wow! You gonna arrest me?"

"Whatcha done then?" grinned Colin. The boy grinned back and zoomed off on his bike. "I'll 'ave yer for resisting arrest!" Colin called after him before walking on, smiling to himself. Then he realized why he was smiling. The idea of having to arrest this boy was, in this neighborhood, a joke. Moishie Brandt was playing football outside his house, kicking the ball into the street. The street was quiet, and when a car did happen by, the boys quickly scattered until it passed. Colin stopped to watch for a moment, hands deep in the pockets of his light beige raincoat.

"You wanna be careful, lads," he said at last. "You might not always hear the cars coming."

The boys stopped their game and looked at him.

"You're that policeman," said one.

"That's right, and I'll 'ave yer for endangering life and limb if you don't watch out," Colin said with a straight face. The boys looked uncertain.

"You." He pointed at Moishie. "C'mere."

Moishie looked terrified. "Why me? It wasn't only me!"

He came over, nevertheless, and when close enough, Colin whispered in his ear, "Play along, will yer? I only want to ask you some more questions about Josh, but let's pretend you're in trouble, shall we?" He winked, and the boy, caught up with the game, winked back conspiratorially.

"I'm taking this young man in for questioning," he told the others. "You lot, watch your backs."

In the house, man and boy grinned at each other.

Colin felt he had broken the ice well on this occasion. Last time the boy had been inhibited and unwilling to talk to him.

Moishie Brandt had dark and curly hair, upon which his yarmulke rested precariously, and startling green eyes. His lightly freckled nose and cheeks and infectious grin endeared him to Colin, who had thought he didn't like kids much.

Man and boy sat side by side on the sofa. Colin brought out a kosher candy bar and handed it to Moishie, impressed when the boy closely inspected the kosher symbol. "I do know what's kosher," Colin said with a wry smile.

"Yeah, but..." Can't trust a goy to know what's kosher were the unsaid words. Or a lapsed Jew, Colin added to himself, and a sense of shame briefly flooded him. Satisfied with the credentials of the candy bar, the boy made a berachah and ate. While he munched contentedly, Colin said, "I was wondering if you used to play round Josh's place after school."

"Yeah, sure, loads of times."

"Out in the street? Football?"

"Sometimes, yes."

"You know that man you said talked to Josh out in the street at home? Did you ever see him yourself?"

Moishie thought for a moment. "Well, I might have done."

Colin tried not to react. "Go on, lad."

"Well, there was one time we were outside playing football, and this man passed by. I can't remember if he passed by specially or was just passing by anyway. But he stopped and talked to Josh. I wasn't close 'cause I was running after the ball. I couldn't hear what they were saying. They were too far away."

"How long did they talk for, d'you reckon?"

"Not long. Couple minutes, tops."

"And when the man left, did he walk toward you or away from you?"

"Away."

Oh, bother, thought Colin. "Okay. And what was Josh like when the man had gone?"

"Dunno. Okay, I suppose. But he kept missing easy shots. As if he was upset."

Colin nodded. "When the man he was talking to Josh, were you able to get a good look at him?"

"Not really. He was right down the street. I couldn't see much."

"Can you tell me his height? Was he white or black? What kind of clothes was he wearing?"

Moishie looked at Colin. "Stand up."

Colin stood obediently.

"Stand over there," Moishie ordered, pointing to the farthest corner of the room. Colin walked over to the farthest point.

"Hm. He's a bit shorter than you." Moishie made a space between thumb and forefinger, measuring about an inch and a half. "He was white. And he was wearing a checked shirt. Couldn't tell the color. And dark trousers. Maybe black jeans. And trainers. I could see he was wearing black and white trainers. They glowed, so I could see them easily."

Not bad, thought Colin. "Did you see the color of his hair or was he wearing a hat?"

Moishie thought hard. "Can't remember. His head looked dark. It might have been his hair or a small hat."

"Could you see his face? Did he have a beard or a mustache?"

Silence. Then, "I don't remember if he had a beard or not. Lots of people around here have beards. I don't notice anymore." The boy was getting stressed. Tears were welling up in his eyes, and his hands were clenched into fists.

Colin came over, sat down, and fished another candy bar out of his pocket. "Here, it's the same as the other one. Same hechsher."

Moishie looked at him sharply. "How do you know the word hechsher?"

Colin coughed. "I used to live next door to some Jews. Played a lot with them. Learned their ways."

"Oh," said Moishie, convinced, and he ate the second candy bar. Colin lifted the boy's yarmulke for a moment, ruffled his curly dark hair, and plopped the yarmulke back on. He took a card out of his pocket and scribbled his home number on the back of it.

"Now, son, this is a very special thing I am doing for you here. This is my policeman's business card, but I am also giving you my very own home phone number."

"Wow," Moishie said dutifully, but the lack of enthusiasm in his voice led Colin to believe the boy had never made phone calls to policemen and didn't intend to start now.

"You've got to promise me you won't tell anyone else this number, okay? It's a secret between you and me."

"Right," Moishie said, still sounding dubious.

"So keep this to yourself. And have a good think about that man who was talking to Josh. If you can try and cast your mind back to that day and you remember anymore details, it would be very helpful. Maybe he had a logo on his jacket. Maybe he had some writing on his hat. Can you think about it and let me know if anything comes to mind?"
