LET 3D THERAPY HELP YOU

3 Dimensions Therapy is a body, soul and mind therapy which is approved and recommended by conventional doctors. It is becoming increasingly popular as a result of the success seen by clients. Through changing and charging ones beliefs, sensations and emotions, the therapy reaches the root of the issue and releases the person from various issues such as low self-esteem, tension, tiredness, fears, anxiety, depression and negative thoughts. This therapy is also an alternative remedy for physical pains such as, backaches, stomach/digestion issues, stammering and various infections.

3D Therapy Can help: • All ages boys, bochorim and men • Leaves the client with a good feeling after each session. • Noticeable results relatively quickly • Approved by Rabbonim

"Golda" Ice Cream Parlor in Gedera Kashered Thanks to a Shuvu Child

Orian Mizrachi, a 12-year-old student in Shuvu Rishon Letzion, was unable to accept that his father's ice cream parlor wasn't kosher and operating on Shabbos. Orian had been growing steadily in Torah and mitzvos, and decided that the time had come to speak to his father about kashering his store.

His father, Alon, had already been approached several times by frum residents and local rabbanim, asking that he keep the store closed on Shabbos, but he had no interest in doing so. Business on Shabbos was particularly good.

However, when his son Orian approached him, Alon could no longer refuse.

Not long afterwards the store became kosher as well, under the supervision of the Gedera Rabbinate.

Rabbanim who had previously tried – unsuccessfully – to persuade Alon to kasher his store were shocked when they noticed his new kashrus certificate. "What made you change your mind?" they asked excitedly. He responded with a smile, "It was easy for me to say no to you. But when my son pleads, saying it goes against everything he's being taught at his Shuvu school, that's different!"

Little Orian subsequently wrote his teacher a message: "Please know, Morah, that this is in your zechus, and in the zechus of the school that taught me."

At Shuvu's recent annual gala Shuvu Bar Mitzvah celebration for 200 boys, Orian stood up and told his story, thanking Shuvu for showing him the light – and ultimately his father as well.

The Golda Ice Cream Parlor and kashrus certificate

Your Questions Answered

Q:

My son has completed מכינה and is now starting ישיבה, how can I help my son adjust well with this change?

A:

Harav Yacov Meir Rosenbaum שליט"א, Rosh Yeshivas Lev Simcha, Gur

Answer: In order for a boy to feel excited about going up a level in his Torah learning - he must see that excitement and "geshmak" from his father. It is crucial that parents demonstrate this through personal example. Additionally any discussion about Yeshiva should be positive so that the בחור can appreciate the חשיבות of תורה and by association those who learn it.

Harav Pinchas Schneebalg שליט"א, Rosh Yeshivas Chaim Meirim, Wiznitz

Answer: The key all lies in the הכנה – the preparation. Firstly prepare the בחור to what exactly the differences between school and ישיבה are. The better he is prepared, the better he is equipped to deal with the change as he has clarity and realistic expectations.

Secondly, it is best to prepare someone from within the Yeshiva to be there for him and help him settle in. This will enable him to מצליח בעזרת ה'.

Harav Dovid Lewis שליט"א, Rosh Yeshivas Ohel Torah

Answer: The start of Yeshiva can be difficult so it is essential that once your son begins, the parent should maintain contact with the Yeshiva. Communication is fundamental.

Keep that in mind throughout the year and touch base with the Mashgiach. He will then look out for your son and moreover he will be able to inform you of any difficulties so they can be nipped in the bud.

Furthermore remember that if parents respect the Maggid Shiur – your son will too – and that is what most often will pave the way to a בחור's success in his learning.

Please note that these answers are general guidelines. Each individual should consult with their Rav or Moreh Derech.

DARK TAPESTRY

by Ruthie Pearlman

“Oh, are you going out without melaveh malkah? Wouldn’t you like a coffee at least and a piece of toast?” Ilana, ever the Jewish mother and hostess, asked her.

“Umm, there’s a coffee machine at the station. I can take it black, and I have sachets of Sweet’n’Low in my pocketbook. I’ll make myself a sandwich, maybe. I think it’s going to be a long night.”

“I’ll make it while you get ready,” Ilana offered. “Tuna, egg, or cheese?”

Ilana liked her for it; nothing more irritating for a generous hostess than a guest constantly protesting that he or she didn’t want anything, that it was quite all right, that she was fine really, when it was patently obvious that she was hungry or thirsty or, if she wasn’t, that she should be. Grinning back, Ilana set to her sandwich-making with goodwill, while Leora finished packing her small knapsack. Adding some fruit and a container of yogurt with a plastic spoon, Ilana bagged the lot and handed it to Leora, who stuffed the package on top of the knapsack.

Leora kissed the older woman’s cheek and left with a cheery wave. “Off to look at all this evidence and finish developing the films!”

After Colin’s visit with the Hardmans, he had walked back home. He had left his mobile phone at home, too. Technically he was off duty and didn’t have to have his pager or mobile with him, but he normally was able to be contacted at all times. Why am I walking about on Shabbos? he asked himself. Shabbos doesn’t mean diddly squat to me. He got back to his flat and turned on the lights and the television with a note of defiance. Yes. I am in control.

He still hadn’t been to investigate the address from that supergeek friend of pesky Baruch Weiss yet. It was growing dark now, hardly worth it. He might as well wait until tomorrow. Anyway, Cleverclogs was going to be at the station tonight, going through that trace evidence, and he would really like to be there to watch her at work. He made himself a note on his personal organizer to go to the address Pincus had found first thing the next morning.

After Shabbos, Colin waited a decent amount to allow for Havdalah, then drove to the station. Peter had declined to join him as it was his night off and he didn’t share quite the same fascination with the analysis as Colin seemed to.

Potter was on duty tonight, and a couple of constables worked steadily on computers in a back room, entering data. They glanced up and grinned at Colin as he passed their open door, and one of them hooked a thumb toward Peter’s office.

“She’s in there, sir,” she said. “Doing things, she is.”

“Ah. Doing things. I’d better go and see what it is, exactly, that she’s doing, hadn’t I?”

He walked through to the office and knocked.

“Come in,” called a muffled voice, and Colin entered the inner sanctum. Leora Jakober smiled at him from her microscope. A pile of neatly organized slides stood at the side.

“This is fascinating stuff,” she told him eagerly. “Come and look.”

Colin went over, and Leora pointed to the computer screen where images were shifting and changing as she focused on them.

"Look, this is the earth taken from the windowsill in Josh's bedroom. We already looked at it, with the pollen spores in the middle. The sample, as you recall, was totally different from the sample we took from a random area in the Hardmans' garden where an abductor could not have trodden to get up a ladder to the kid's bedroom. Right?"

Colin nodded.

Leora replaced the slide with another, and the computer image changed. "Now this is a sample taken from the ground around the playhouse."

Colin stared at the lumps of soil granules and pollen spores and other, unidentifiable things.

"And?" he said at last, baffled.

Leora sighed. "Oh, well, I suppose I shouldn't expect too much. I'll explain it in words of one syllable, all right?"

Colin tried to look offended and failed as she shot him a white American grin.

"Okay. Basically it's like this. The sample taken from the windowsill of Josh's bedroom was not anything remotely like the sample we took from the area around the playhouse. Ergo, the abductor was not in the playhouse. Not as far as I can tell anyway."

Colin felt his heart plummet to the approximate vicinity of his shoes. He had, despite trying desperately to remain professionally aloof about it, become hopeful that the playhouse would house the secrets to Josh and his abductors.

"What about the saliva and stuff on the paper cups?"

"Not having anything to compare it with makes it a bit difficult to pin it on anyone," Leora said. "But I've documented all the DNA in the saliva and any hair and skin cells I have found. Now all we need to do is find a match for it."

"I see," Colin said, hardly able to contain his disappointment. "So I wonder who it is who is using that playhouse if not the Fox?"

"I have no idea. Maybe your pint-sized investigator who has been keeping an eye on it till now can continue doing so and catch the person in the act."

"Good idea. What about the footprints?"

"Oh, yes, the footprints. I developed the photos I took with the Polyray. I'll put them up for you to look at." She pinned up some ten-by-eights on the wall, sharp black and white prints of shoe treads.

"These are the treads I photographed at the playhouse."

"They are very clear. Amazing," Colin said.

"I could have lifted them if the ground had been softer and made a cast, but it was just the wooden floor and some dust to work with, and not even enough dust. But I think these are pretty sharp."

"They look amazing, as if they were dipped in paint and pressed onto paper. But what do they tell us?"

"Well, I have a photograph here that your forensic man Joe took of the partial footprint lifted on the windowsill. In this case he did a lift rather than a photo or a cast, because it was pretty deep in the earth left on the sill, but not quite deep enough for a cast. A photograph or lift differs from a cast in that it is a two-dimensional reproduction of a print, like a fingerprint lift. A cast is a three-dimensional structure that can provide a positive reproduction of the footwear.
